

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

WHEN issuing the FOURTEENTH ANNUAL VOLUME of the IRISH ALMANAC AND OFFICIAL DIRECTORY, Mr. THOM desires to discharge himself of the pleasing duty of again offering his grateful acknowledgments to the many distinguished personages and public authorities to whom he is indebted for the ready and valuable aid which they have afforded to him in the revision of the several portions of the work to which they have favoured him with their attention, or which are connected with their respective departments. In a work of this nature, comprising a large collection of information, much of it as mutable in detail as it is multifarious in character, it is only by such aid that the constant revision necessary, to ensure accuracy and completeness, can be satisfactorily effected.

While thus acknowledging the kindness with which his applications for such aid have been responded to, it is gratifying to the Compiler to believe that the readiness with which they have been met, may be acknowledged at the same time as evidence of the favourable reception of his labours in the production of a comprehensive book of reference and authority, adapted to the use of all classes, and to be relied upon for correctness and authenticity,—and of the estimation in which it is generally held by persons engaged in the active pursuits of life, professional, official, and commercial, as well as by others distinguished in private and public station, and in the walks of literature and science.

For the more distinguishing features of the work,—the collection and compilation of Statistics of the United Kingdom and British Empire, and specially of Ireland,—as well as those relating to the British Colonial Possessions and Foreign States,—the Compiler is alone responsible: and also for the annual repertory of legislation, the accounts of the local features and characteristics of the respective counties, cities, and boroughs in Ireland,—topographical, productive, commercial, and municipal, and for the general arrangement and supervision of the whole mass of information contained in the work. He has been induced to give special attention and a prominent place to the statistical portions of the work, in the hope that the information collected and presented in them will be found useful, not only as a record of commercial transactions at home and abroad, but also in illustrating the social condition and progress of our own country, and especially in affording, by comparison of one year with another, evidence of the progressive improvement and advancement which has, of late years, been happily manifested in the condition of Ireland.

Encouraged by the favourable appreciation which the work has met with, as evidenced in its increased and increasing circulation, and by the valuable aid from time to time offered to him, it has been his constant endeavour to enlarge its range of usefulness; and the work in its annual growth has expanded under his hands, from an IRISH ALMANAC AND OFFICIAL DIRECTORY, into one of a more imperial character. Its original title, under which it was first published in 1844, and which at that time described it with sufficient aptness, as a publication relating mainly and almost exclusively to Ireland, is still retained; but rather as identifying its origin, than as being equally descriptive of the present more comprehensive scope of the work,—embracing as it now does, in addition to the ordinary matter of an Almanac and Directory for Ireland, several distinct Directories for the other portions of the United Kingdom, and for its Colonial Possessions, as well as the more distinctive features already alluded to.

These divisions, as well as the following, may be instanced as amongst some of the more important additions made from time to time since the first publication of the work.

The STATISTICAL DIVISIONS, above alluded to, have been revised and improved in accordance with the latest information.

The PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and ORDERS of KNIGHTHOOD, have been enlarged, and now include the British, Scotch, and Irish orders; not being confined to the distinguished personages of Ireland only, but embracing those of the several portions of the United Kingdom. The Compiler has taken much pains to make this portion of his work complete and accurate, and is greatly indebted to the countenance and aid afforded to him by the many distinguished persons who have honoured him with information and emendations in the annual revision of the work.

Complete ARMY and NAVY Lists, with the Regiments and Ships, their Stations, &c., and ALPHABETICAL LISTS OF ALL THE OFFICERS IN BOTH SERVICES, and also a List of all the Regiments and Officers of MILITIA in the United Kingdom,—are included in the work, corrected to the latest possible date.

The POSTAL DIRECTORY embraces all recent alterations, so as to present a complete guide to the internal postal arrangements of Ireland and the United Kingdom, and also to our postal communications with the British Colonial Possessions and Foreign Countries.

Besides the ordinary matters included in the CALENDAR, a "FARMERS' AND GARDENERS' CALENDAR," prepared and contributed by the Professor of Agriculture in Queen's College, Cork, has been added; and together with the particulars of the AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES in Ireland, FAIRS and MARKETS, and other similar matters, will, it is hoped, be found to contain information useful to persons residing in the Rural and Agricultural Districts.

Other portions of the work contain LISTS of MEMBERS of both HOUSES of PARLIAMENT, the GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS of the United Kingdom and the BRITISH COLONIES; of the several branches of the LEARNED PROFESSIONS, and of the different RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS in Ireland: of the BANKING ESTABLISHMENTS in Ireland, and in the United Kingdom, as well as of FOREIGN BANKING HOUSES in the chief Cities of Europe and the Colonies; the UNIVERSITIES, COLLEGES, SCHOOLS of MEDICINE and SURGERY, and other Educational Establishments, and Institutions connected with Literature, Science, Manufactures, Commerce, Agriculture, and the Arts.

The COUNTY, BOROUGH, and CITY DIRECTORIES contain, in addition to their respective Local Authorities, POOR LAW OFFICERS, and other information, complete LISTS of the MAGISTRACY of each locality: and the INDEXES to this and other divisions of the book will be found to facilitate reference to any portion of it.

These INDEXES present, in fact, Alphabetical Lists of the whole body of Government Officers; the Magistracy of Ireland; the Legal Profession, in its several branches; the Established Church in Ireland, and the Roman Catholic, Presbyterian, and other Dissenting Churches; besides the several Subordinate INDEXES to particular portions of the work, and a GENERAL INDEX to the whole.

For a more specific detail of the variety of matter contained in the work, the Compiler invites an inspection of the Table of Contents.

The collection, arrangement, analysis, and condensation of so vast a mass of materials into one volume, containing so multitudinous a collection of facts and details,—in many cases of an ever-changing character,—involve no small amount of labour, a large correspondence, and the extensive use of parliamentary reports and papers and other public documents, as also of many other sources of authentic information which have been consulted, and from which much of the information has been abstracted.

In the execution of his task, he has omitted no practicable precaution and exertion to make its result as accurate, complete, and impartial as possible.

It would be too much to assert that such a work can be wholly free from error or omission. The Compiler can confidently aver that he has spared no pains or expense to avoid both; and the care which has been bestowed upon the book gives him reason to hope that few errors will be found.

The Compiler having resorted to every available source from which the most authentic information could be obtained, it has also been his aim to obtain the most recent,—and with the view both of insuring accuracy and completeness, and also of bringing the information down to the latest possible period, the whole Book has been kept in type open for correction to the latest moment consistent with the practicability of placing it in the hands of the public on the first day of the year to which it relates.

Begins on the earth, generally, at 25 min. past 7, afternoon time at Dublin, in longitude 155° 18' east of Greenwich, and latitude 32° 31' south. Ends on the earth, generally, at 43 min. past midnight, in longitude 104° 36' west of Greenwich, and latitude 25° 50' north.
2. An Annular Eclipse of the Sun, September 18, 1857, invisible at Dublin. Begins on the earth, generally, at 12 min. past 2, morning, mean time at Dublin, in longitude 47° 49' east of Greenwich, and latitude 36° 17' north. Ends on the earth, generally, at 7 min. past 8, morning, in longitude 139° 34' east of Greenwich, and latitude 22° 14' south.

The above list comprises all the visible eclipses of Jupiter's Satellites which occur within the present year. Those between April 12th and November 2nd, happen on the western side of the planet; and those both before and after that period, on the eastern side. If viewed with an inverting telescope the appearances will be directly the contrary. The times of Immersion (Im.) and Emergence (Em.) have been derived from the Nautical Ephemeris, assuming Dublin to be 25 min. 21 sec. west of Greenwich.

This Table is intended for the use of persons engaged in making surveys in Ireland, by enabling them readily to find the variation of the needle at the place of the survey. The difference between the Sun's distance from the north, as observed by the Compass, and that given by the table, is the variation. Places to the east or west of Cork, Dublin, and Belfast, have the same Azimuths as in the table, and at intermediate places they may be found by proportion, and also for intermediate days. Allowance is made for the effect of refraction, by which the Sun appears rising or setting when it is actually below the horizon. The table is sufficiently accurate for the purpose for which it is intended, without making allowance for the height of the instrument; but it is supposed the observer is on the level ground, and that there are no considerable inequalities of ground between him and the Sun at rising or setting. Note.—The variation of the Needle at the Observatory of Trinity College, Dublin, in September, 1856, was 25° 18' west.

Note.—All the calculations in this Almanac are made according to mean time, that is, the time shown by well regulated clocks and watches.

The mark of the (*) in the Calendar, denotes the highest tides at Dublin Bar.

TABLES to be used with the Calendar, for finding the times of the Rising and Setting of the Sun and Moon in any part of Ireland.

METHOD OF USING THE FOLLOWING TABLES (I. AND II.)

With the proper Argument enter Table I., and take out the corresponding Number with its proper sign. Find in Table II. the Number corresponding to the Latitude of the Place, and write it under the former Number with its proper sign. Multiply one Number by the other, and the product will be a number of minutes, with a decimal annexed, either to be added or subtracted, according to the rules given below.

CASE I.—If the tabular numbers have like signs, add to the time of Rising at Dublin, and subtract from the time of Setting.
CASE II.—If the tabular numbers have unlike signs, subtract from the time of Rising at Dublin, and add to the time of Setting.

TIDES.—As the difference of the heights of the consecutive Day-tides and Night-tides on the Bar of Dublin rarely exceed ten inches, unless influenced by high winds which cannot be foretold, so the heights of the tide which come between six o'clock in the morning and six in the afternoon are only inserted in this Almanac. The times of high water, and also the heights of the Tide, were calculated from the Tables of the late Rev. B. McMahon, adding to the latter 6 feet 6 inches, a quantity deduced from the most recent observations of Captain Hutchinson, R.N., Harbour Master of Kingstown, who remarks that the proper and safe channel is between the East buoy and a line in one with the Great North Wall, and not to the westward of that line, as the water shoals.

FARMERS' CALENDAR.

JANUARY.

THIS is generally the coldest month; and winter now, in the words of Thomson, "reigns tremendous o'er the conquered year," and although "the vegetable kingdom dormants," so must not the farmer; the days no doubt are very short, yet it is wiser to take advantage of all open weather, even now, for performing certain operations, than to defer them to a longer day, when other and more pressing avocations may render it difficult if not impossible to overtake them. Amongst these we may expressly notice draining and deepening land, these essential improvements of wet and shallow land, without which it is folly to attempt their cultivation; also the construction of fences, the removal of surface stones, brushwood, &c., the formation of water meadows, and the enriching of the land by the addition to it of marl, calcareous sand, fresh earth, &c.

Draining.—Experience has demonstrated the superiority of deep over shallow draining, and has shown that wherever the outlet will allow, 4 feet should be the minimum depth: drains of less than 3 feet depth, although they may appear on a superficial inspection to dry the land, do not in reality do so, for when a body of water lies so near the surface, capillary attraction is capable of saturating that surface in wet weather, more especially in winter and spring; but when the drains are 4 feet deep and upwards, not only is capillary attraction less to be apprehended, but there is less probability of the soluble ingredients of the manure and of the soil being washed down into them, and so removed, or of the waterway being choked; but the great advantage of deep draining is that it allows rain water and the air which follows it as it descends, to act on the large body of soil above the drain, decomposing its crude materials, and by degrees adapting it for affording food to the roots of plants.

In the formation of the waterway of minor drains—or those which discharge themselves into the sub-main or main drains—round stones of a small size, from the beach, or obtained by screening, or stones broken to a small size (so as that they may be passed through a ring 2½ inches in diameter), may be used, provided they be put in quite free from dirt or rubbish, and that they be carefully covered with a sod, grass-side down, or with a few inches in thickness of stiff clay; in either case the covering should be tramped down hard, thus as effectually as possible to prevent the admission from above of water carrying with it matters which might choke the drain. A more efficient drain is formed by using draining tiles; they should have collars, and none of less internal diameter than an inch and half should be used.

The distance between the drains must be determined by the nature of the ground. Our subsoils are in general formed of a mixture of clay and gravel, and as a general rule, it may be laid down that drains 4½ feet deep, and 40 feet apart, will drain such land sufficiently.

Subsoiling.—The effect of deep drainage is in time to render the whole of the soil above the level of the bottom of the drain fitted for becoming feeding-ground to the roots of plants, but this result is hastened by breaking up the subsoil to as great a depth as possible, and thus allow rain water to percolate and produce its decomposing and meliorating effect on the soil. Subsoiling is usually performed by means of the subsoil plough following in the deep furrow formed by a common plough across the line of the drains; efficiently worked, this plough loosens and breaks the subsoil to the depth of 12 or 14 inches below the bottom of the furrow formed by the common plough, without bringing any of it to the surface. Where large stones, or the roots of trees or bushes, prevent the working of the subsoil plough, the business of deepening the land may be effected by means of the spade, assisted by the crow-bar, foot-pick or common pick. The usual method of performing the work is to open a trench by removing (throwing back or carting away) a spading, and shovelling of the upper soil to the depth of about a foot, and then digging and breaking the subsoil to the depth of another foot, the surface spit and shovelling from the second is thrown on top of the loosened subsoil of the first trench, and so the work proceeds. Some carry on the work of subsoiling and draining simultaneously, using the stones found in the subsoil for forming the waterway in the drains, but clay is apt to adhere to stones so obtained, which if put into the drain will inevitably choke it.

Wet undrained land should not be subsoiled, as the loosening of the ground only forms larger interstices to be occupied by water, and it is recommended not to subsoil drained land, for at least a year after the operation of draining has been performed.

The subsoiling of land which possesses a less depth of good workable soil than 18 inches should never be dispensed with.

Fences.—Whether it be the levelling in of inefficient, crooked fences, which cause such waste of land, and are such eye-sores to every agriculturalist who happens to visit this country, or the formation of new ones, this is a proper season, provided the weather be open, for performing such works. In fencing a farm it should be borne in mind that small enclosures not only cause a waste of land but a loss of time in working it; in elevated and exposed situations the shelter afforded to cattle by hedges and plantations is useful, but at levels adapted to the cultivation of farm crops, shelter is not required, and the fields should therefore be large; in farms of 20 acres and under, and where the cattle are house-fed, the boundary fence, with those perhaps of a couple of paddocks for calves, are quite sufficient.

The best fence, and one that causes the waste of the least land, is the stone fence, which may be built in the usual way, by masons, using mortar, or without mortar, as a dry wall, by handy labourers.

Of Thorn Fences, that which causes the least waste of land, and is therefore most desirable in a farm, is the ground hedge. The land in preparation for it should be trenched and manured, and good three-year-old transplanted thorns should be planted in a single line at 8 or 9 inches apart from plant. The ground hedge requires to be protected from injury by cattle or sheep until it has acquired sufficient strength to resist them, which in good ground may be in five or six years.

The Hedge and Ditch Fence should in like manner be planted with good transplanted thorns, care being taken that in planting, some good earth be placed in immediate contact with the roots previously to laying them in the "quick bed." They may be shortened so as that about an inch in length of the shortened stem may project from the face of the ditch. Where dike and bank fences are of such standing that the hedge would form a sufficient fence, the bottom of the gripe should be cleaned out—a proper fall for the drainage water being secured—a conduit drain formed in the bottom, and the land levelled in over it.

Old hedges may now be renovated by heading down or by plashing.

The Reclamation of Waste Land may now be proceeded with, more especially the top-dressing of bog land which has been drained, either by means of horses and carts in time of hard frost, or by means of a tramway.

The Formation of Water Meadows is a profitable mode of employing labour at this time; and for all such work, as forming water-courses, trenching, and levelling, winter is the suitable season.

Established Water Meadows.—See that the water be regularly admitted, that when on, it flows evenly over the surface, and when shut off that the land and drains become dry.

Cattle.—Unremitting attention must now be given to cattle, whether in the stalls, byres, hammels, or boxes. Let the fattening cattle be fed at least three times daily, viz., at daylight, noon, and dusk, with as much Swedish turnips as they can consume, over which some bean, pea, or linseed meal should be scattered. A beast will consume about the weight of one of its quarters of Swedish turnips daily, say for an ordinary sized ox 12 stones (4 stones at each meal); let them be fed regularly at the same hour, and after each feed give some clean, fresh oaten straw; let them be curried and wisped daily, keep their house clean, and regulate the warmth of it, so that they shall not perceptibly perspire; the nearer the house approaches to this degree of heat, the less food is required to produce a given amount of fatness.—See calendar for December.

Milch Cows will require like attention; let them receive a variety of food, such as mixture of mangel and turnips, to which parsnips or potatoes may, with advantage, be added; feed them five or six times daily, and if the morning and evening meals be of prepared (cooked) food, this will go far towards preventing the bad flavour so generally the effect of feeding milch cows with turnips; let them have fresh sweet hay or oaten straw after each feed, turn them out for a short time, on fine days, for exercise; observe the strictest regularity in the time of feeding; curry and wisp them down daily, and keep the byre clean, sweet, and well ventilated.

Young Cattle should receive plenty of clean fresh oaten straw, which should be placed in a rack in the yard, let them also have Swedish turnips, for which their improved condition and the superiority of their manure will amply compensate. The starvation system, pursued by too many farmers towards the young stock, is the effect of short-sighted economy.

Sheep fattening in houses, or on turnips and hay, given on grass land, will now require constant attention. They thrive well in a yard with an open shed, and their food, consisting of turnips and hay, may be given to them in a trough; a few lumps of rock-salt should be left in a dry place within reach of the sheep; each sheep should receive about a pound of linseed cake daily. The yard should be kept clean and dry by having fresh turf mould, sand, or straw, spread over it daily; sheep in yards are liable to the attack of foot-rot; but this may be prevented by forming a mound of earth in the yard and occasionally scattering over it some newly slaked lime. Young sheep, indeed sheep of every age, ought to have the Swedish turnip sliced and given in troughs with a mixture of linseed and bean meal scattered over them.

Manure.—The cattle being abundantly fed, large accessions will be daily made to the midden. Let special care be taken that this indispensable requisite in successful farming be not injured by water passing through it and carrying away its most valuable ingredients; if the erection of a roof to protect the dunghill from rain be considered too expensive, at least prevent the water from the roofs of the cattle houses passing through it; and by covering it over from time to time with turf-mould, sand, saw-dust, burned clay, or even with good earth, prevent the escape of its volatile matters.

Green Crops, turnips, carrots, parsnips, and mangel, still in the fields, should be raised the first dry weather and stored, and the ploughing of such land in preparation for corn proceeded with, whenever the state of the land and weather permit. Also of lea for oats; and where the autumnal ploughing of stubble land has been deferred, the first opportunity should be seized for performing this very important work.

Wheat sowing should be concluded as speedily as circumstances will permit.

Grass land may now be top-dressed with farm-yard manure, or with a compost consisting of good earth mixed with ashes, bone-dust, and gypsum, or with lime and salt.

The Horses will be occupied in frosty weather in carting out manure, threshing corn, and carrying it to market, drawing home lime, carting materials for making or mending farm roads, &c., and in fair weather in ploughing; they may be maintained in good working condition on chaffed hay and straw, with carrots and Swedish turnips, to which some bean meal or oats should be added as the spring advances.

FEBRUARY.

Although this month ushers in the spring quarter, it is better classed with winter; the weather is frequently more cold and wet, and cheerless, than at any other period; still there are indications in the occasional melody of the thrush and blackbird, and in the springing of the snow-drop and crocus, of a return to brighter days.

The calendar of the preceding month should be consulted, and any work therein directed to be performed should be pushed forward with alacrity, as busy March will soon be upon us; more especially should advantage be taken of the first suitable weather to conclude the business of Wheat-sowing—for although the varieties, such as the Talavera, which is called spring wheat, sometimes produce a good crop, sown so late even as the beginning of April, such late sowings are also late in ripening, and fine weather late in harvest is not to be calculated on in this climate.

Oats may be sown whenever the state of the land and weather is propitious; early sowing not only secures an early harvest, but a saving in the quantity of seed; poor land requires heavier seeding than that which is in good heart; but we have seen excellent crops (from 25 to 30 barrels of 14 stone each per Irish acre) from 8 stone of seed; in these cases, however, the land was in good heart, and the crops were got in early, and when the land was in a dry state; oats on clover or grass lea, ploughed last month, should be sown broadcast and covered by the harrows; some plough and shovel the furrows to obtain fresh earth and deeper cover, and find that the additional outlay for labour is more than compensated by the superiority of the crop.

When oats follows a manured crop, it, like wheat, is usually sown on the surface, previously merely harrowed, and ploughed under; but a much superior method is to plough and harrow the ground, and deposit the seed in the prepared land by means of the drilling machine, the drill coulter set at 9 to 12 inches apart, according to the richness of the land; this admits of hand-hoeing, or, in the event of grass-seed being sown in the "broad" next month, secures greater space and more light for the young grasses.

Spring Vetches should be sown as early in the month as the land and weather will permit; in preparation for this crop, a piece of stubble land should have a good dressing of manure ploughed into it in autumn, or the beginning of winter; 4 bushels (about 18 stone) is the usual complement of seed for an Irish acre, to which some add two or three stone of rye or oats (the latter is preferable) for the purpose of supporting the vetches. The seed may be sown broadcast and harrowed in, and additional cover obtained by shovelling the furrows. Vetches are an invaluable species of summer food for horses, horned cattle, and store pigs; they will be off the land in June or July, which may be prepared for, and cropped with, transplanted rape or stone turnip, which being eaten off by sheep in the beginning of November, will leave the land in prime order for wheat; or, should the land not be adapted to that grain, the rape may be reserved for winter feed, and be eaten off in time to prepare the land for oats or barley.

Beans.—In proportion as their great value to the farmer becomes known will their cultivation extend; the tick and Heligoland kinds, which are usually sown in the present or next month, are no doubt liable in dry summers to the attack of the collier, or black aphid, and to damage by wet weather, especially if sown late; but both these objections may in a great degree be neutralized by cultivating the Russian field bean, which is sown in October, and so hardy as not to be injured by any but the most severe winters. On good land, properly farmed, beans and wheat may be grown alternately for an indefinite period.

Where the land is of a clayey nature, and difficult to be worked at this season, the drills may be formed and manured for beans in autumn, and the seed dibbled about 3 inches apart along the crown of the drill: this work may be performed by boys or women, and seed equal in value to their wages will be saved—6 stone of seed being in this way sufficient for a statute acre.

MARCH.

This is indeed a busy month with farmers, the day is now of sufficient length, and the weather, although liable to many changes, is on the whole generally favourable for out-door occupations.

Refer to the calendars of the two preceding months, and proceed without further delay to complete the work therein directed.

Wheat.—The sowing of spring wheat should be finished early in the month, and rather more seed will now be required than if sown earlier.

Beans and Peas should also be in the ground at farthest by the end of the first week.

Oats may be sown throughout the month, but the early sown, provided the land be in a proper state, produces the most certain and generally the best crop.

Peas, although a valuable farm crop, both for its grain and straw, is so liable to injury from wet that little inducement can be held out to the Irish farmer to cultivate it in preference to oats, to which both our soil and climate are especially adapted.

Potatoes.—We consider October and November the proper season for potato planting, but should circumstances prevent its accomplishment at that time, it should by no means be deferred beyond the present, or at farthest the beginning of the ensuing month.

Ash-leaved kidneys, kempas, second-earlies, fortyfolds, and like early kinds planted now in dry, fresh, and light loamy land, will be ready for use early in July.—For details on this subject see calendar for October.

Parsnips.—In preparation for parsnips, stubble land should be trench-ploughed if the subsoil be good, and if it be crude or bad, it should be subsoiled in the autumn; cross-ploughed as early in this month as the weather and state of the land will permit, and about its close, grubbed and harrowed, formed into drills as if for turnips or potatoes, manured equally well, and sown in a rut formed by the coulter of the turnip machine, on the crown of the drill; 5 lbs. of seed, per statute acre, is about the quantity usually sown, and the hollow crowned Jersey is the best variety.

Carrots may be sown at any time in this, or the first half of the ensuing month; and next to the parsnip, this is perhaps the best root crop the farmer can cultivate, provided, however, that his land be suited to it. Carrots usually follow corn, and in preparation for them, the land should be deeply ploughed as soon as may be after the corn has been removed; with this ploughing, if the land be naturally dry or efficiently drained, twenty to thirty tons of good farm-yard manure, per statute acre, should be covered in, and if the subsoil be at all compact, it should be broken up by the subsoil plough, or by men with subsoil forks, following in the track of the plough.

Early in the present month the land should be cross-ploughed, or deeply worked by the Finlayson; and immediately before sowing it should be again grubbed, harrowed and rolled, until effectually pulverized; the seed being previously rubbed hard between the hands to remove the bristles which adhere to it, may then be sown on the flat, by means of the drill-machine, in rows about 15 inches apart.

Should the land be infested with the seeds of weeds, such as charlock, poppy, &c., the better plan will be to form the rows so far asunder that the horse-hoe can work between them; and in that case, and where there is a command of well rotted manure, the land may be prepared as for Swedish turnips.—See calendar for May.

When carrots are cultivated on a small scale, and by the spade, the land should be trenched in autumn, and plenty of good manure buried deeply; it should now be forked and broken fine, and the seed may be sown in rows 15 inches apart, on the flat. An excellent mode of sowing is to form holes with a planting stick, at 6 inches apart, along the row, to fill the holes almost to the surface, with a compost formed of ashes, earth, guano, or bone dust, or in lieu of this, with charred peat which had been saturated with liquid manure—8 or 4 seeds to be dropped in each hole, and barely covered with fine earth.

The white Belgian, and the Altringham (red), are the best for field crops, and 5 lbs. per statute, or 8 lbs. per Irish, acre, is the usual quantity of seed.

Lucerne.—This crop, although much neglected in this country, would be found well adapted to much of our dry limestone soil. It requires a deep, dry, and rich soil; on such the produce is very great. Favourably circumstanced as to soil and situation, it may be mown three times in a summer, each time producing a heavy crop of highly nutritious food, greatly relished by horses and cattle in general. Plenty of strong farm-yard manure being ploughed in, either in autumn or now, and the ground harrowed fine, the seed may be sown with the turnip-barrow, in drills 15 inches apart: this will require about 20 lbs. of seed per Irish acre. Lucerne is sometimes sown broadcast, and harrowed in with barley or oats; in this case, 30 lbs. of seed for a statute, say 30 lbs. for an Irish, acre.

Sainfoin will be found the most productive herbage for shallow limestone gravel soils. The ground on which it is sown ought to be quite free from weeds, and well pulverized, the seed may then be sown broadcast, at the rate of 4 bushels of seed per statute acre; and the crop kept in a productive state, by an annual application in November, of a mixture of ashes, soot, and earth, or compost which had been prepared during the summer, by being saturated with tank liquid. Gypsum, at the rate of a couple of cwt. per statute acre, has been applied to this crop, as well as to lucerne and clover, with excellent effect, as top-dressing.

Rye.—In situations too elevated or exposed for spring vetches, rye may now be sown. It will withstand any weather, and be in early, and until it has shot out, is much relished by cattle and sheep. Four bushels of seed are sufficient for an Irish acre.

Cabbages.—A seed-bed of York cabbages should now be sown, to provide plants for filling up vacancies in any of the root crops, for which they are well suited.

Cattle.—Fattening cattle will now be fast approaching to maturity, to promote which it is usual to give them oil-cake, or corn; the former is broken by a machine for the purpose, and either scattered over the sliced turnips, or given separately after each meal; 3 or 4 pounds are sufficient for a small, 8 or 9 for a large beast. Corn should be bruised, and given in the same way, and in about the same quantity. Beef must bring a good price to remunerate for such expensive feeding, but the manure of cake or corn fed beasts is nearly two-fold more valuable than when turnips only are given.

Cows, Young Cattle, and Sheep, will require the unremitting attention recommended last month. If in calf, cows should receive a couple of pounds of oil-cake daily; or in lieu of oil-cake, chaffed hay, or straw moistened with linseed porridge; it keeps the bowels regular, and is thought greatly to lessen the risk of danger in calving.

Swine.—Store pigs will thrive on the refuse garbage of the farm, such as mangel, and Swedish turnip tops, and such portions of the roots as the cattle do not consume, with light corn, small potatoes, parsnips, carrots, &c. The sties should be well and regularly supplied with fresh litter, and be kept quite clean. Pigs put up to fatten should have abundance of boiled or steamed roots, over which a little bean, pea, or oatmeal may, with great advantage, be scattered; steamed Swedish turnips have been found excellent feeding for fattening pigs, and parsnips and carrots are greatly relished by them, whether raw or boiled.

Disbud Turnips and Mangel.—Towards the latter end of the month, roots will probably have begun to push forth buds, in which case the clamps should be turned, the shoots rubbed off, and the roots reclamped and thatched.

Roots for Seed.—Those who possess superior kinds of turnips, mangel, carrots, or parsnips, should now select some of the best formed, and plant them in good dry ground, in an open situation, in lines 3 feet apart, and 18 inches root from root in the lines; only one variety of the same species should be planted in the same field, otherwise spurious seed will be the result.

The Ewes will now be lambing, and a field of rape or an irrigated meadow will prove invaluable in producing a flow of milk. In default of these, let them have abundance of siled Swedes, with good hay. If a ewe lose her lamb, replace it by taking one from another which has a couple; hold her until it has sucked, then put them into a house for the night, and in the morning she will be found to have adopted it. It must not, however, for some time come within sight of its own mother. Weakly lambs should be fed with warm ewe's or cow's milk, and the ewes must be held for them; they should also be put into a clean dry house, and well attended to for a few days, or until they have recovered sufficient strength.

The Horses will now compensate for the care bestowed upon them during the winter months. The demands upon this invaluable animal are now incessant; his hours of labour are increased, and a good allowance of bruised oats or beans should be given, with the cut hay, carrots, Swedes, or fuzze, with which his condition was easily maintained up to this period.

Irrigation.—Attend to water-meadows; see that the water flows evenly over the surface and does not stagnate in any part, and also that when it is taken off, the ground becomes dry.

APRIL.

Advantage should be taken of dry weather to plough, grub, and harrow, and clear of weeds, land intended to bear green crops; bear in mind that in dry land deeply and effectually pulverized, good manure and clean cultivation are the secrets of successful farming.

Flax.—This crop does best on a deep, dry loam; but good crops may be raised on any kind of land, provided it be dry, in good heart, and well worked.

Preparation of the Land.—The proper place for flax in the rotation is on stubble land, which has produced only a crop of corn since being broken up from lea of two or more years' standing; some prefer sowing it after a manured crop, others enrich the land by ploughing in manure immediately before sowing the seed (this, and the application of liquid manure to the growing crop, is much practised in Belgium), but manure recently applied is apt to produce coarse-fibred flax. The stubble land should be deeply ploughed, and, if necessary, subsoil-ploughed in autumn; cross-ploughed or worked with Finlayson's harrow, early in this month; all root weeds cleanly removed, and the ground, by repeated grubbing, harrowings, and rollings, brought to a high degree of "tilth," and finished flat, with a mere scrape of the plough to indicate ridges, and thereby guide the sower.

Sowing.—Riga seed is most approved, although excellent crops are produced from seed saved in this country; it should be carefully sifted to remove the seed of weeds, and sown broadcast as evenly as possible, at the rate of 2½ bushels (125 lbs.) per statute acre, and covered by a couple of turns of the grass-seed harrow, and the work finished by rolling.

Weeding must be carefully attended to; and should the land be poor, the growth of the crop will be promoted by the application, in showery weather, of two or three cwt. of guano mixed with some good earth, ashes, charred peat, and the like, and which may be scattered by hand.

Pulling.—Towards the end of July the flax will have assumed a yellowish hue, and the seed within the seed-vessel a degree of firmness indicative of the proper degree of maturity; in pulling, the roots are kept evenly together, and if the object be, as it always should, to save the seed, it (the flax) is not tied in sheaves, but stooked loosely and thinly, the roots resting on the ground. When sufficiently dry, which it may be in six or eight days, according to the state of the weather, it is tied in sheaves, and threshed for the seed, or it may be stacked and threshed at any time.

Previously to the exertions of the Flax Improvement Society, the flax, with the seed on it, was steeped as soon as pulled, and the seed wasted; but it is usual now to ripple—that is, to collect the seed by pulling the upper part containing the seed-vessels forcibly through an iron comb, and drying the seed and seed-vessels for feeding cattle; the flax is then steeped; and although by this plan, when carefully executed, a superior sample of flax, is produced, it is at the expense of lessening the value of the seed.

Steeping.—The steep pool should, if possible, be in clay land, and so situated that the water, after the flax has been steeped, and which will then be rich in the food of plants, may flow over a piece of grass-land at a lower level; a small stream should be allowed to flow into the pool; the sheaves of flax are placed close together, and in a slanting position, and with the roots downwards in the pool; the top must be under water, and that this may be so, it is usually loaded with sods or stones. Here it remains for about ten days, or until the woody part can on trial be easily and cleanly separated from the fibre, when it is carefully raised, and neatly, evenly, and thinly spread on a recently-mown piece of grass-land, where it lies for two or three days, and is then turned; and in three or four days more, and when perfectly dry, it is carefully raised, tied in sheaves, and is then ready for the operation of beetling and scutching, which are best performed at the flax-mill.

Clover and Grass Seeds are usually sown with spring corn; they may be sown with the hand, the clover and grass seeds being well mixed together, or much more correctly and expeditiously with the grass-seed sowing-machine; the seeds may be covered with the grass-seed harrow, or still better with the web or chain harrow, or should the weather be showery, it will be sufficient merely to roll the ground after it is sown.

Italian Rye-grass, sown towards the end of the month, at the rate of 3 bushels per Irish acre, in oats now "abreard," will, if the land have been well prepared, be nearly as tall as the oats at reaping time. Unlike clover or perennial rye-grass, it will not render the sheaves difficult to "win" (dry); and with the oat straw, when cut up together with the chaff-cutter, is preferable, for either cows or horses, to middling hay, but with the unthreshed oats when so cut up, forms a species of food superior to the same quantity of oats and good hay, given separately, and in an uncut and unbruised state.

For Irrigated Meadows.—The stolons of florin spread on the surface, and covered lightly with earth, or fastened in with the point of the spade; after which 5 lbs. of fexall, and an equal quantity of Timothy grass may be scattered on the surface and rolled in.

For alternate husbandry, one year in grass, there is nothing to equal Italian rye-grass and red clover—three bushels of the former and 10 lbs. of the latter, per Irish acre, or 4 bushels without clover. For two years' grass on good land, a stone of red clover and two bushels of perennial rye-grass is a good mixture, or 1½ stone of clover with one bushel of perennial rye-grass. The above quantities will be sufficient without a corn crop, but not too much with one.

Fuzze.—This is a species of food for horses, and even for cows, which in some places may be cultivated with great advantage, such as on shallow hills where it would be difficult to obtain soil for crops, or even for good pasture. This land being digged or ploughed, and harrowed, might be sown with fuzze seed, at the rate of 20 lbs. per acre, or planted, using young plants in November, and be mown annually.

Cattle in the Stall.—In proportion as these become fat, their manure increases in value; therefore, the longer they are kept, the more benefit the farm receives, and the higher probably will be the price of beef. In England they are almost always finished off with oil-cake; this greatly increases the value of the manure, but it is expensive. The substitute of native oil-cake, made of flax-seed, barley, or bean meal, will probably be found more economical.

Cows will still be on mangel, carrots, and parsnips, to the aid of which Italian rye-grass and winter tares will, towards the end of the month, have come.

Liquid Manure.—The meadows will be much improved by a watering in the early part of this month, with tank liquid. About 2,000 gallons of fermented liquid, which has lain in the tank for five or six weeks, is a sufficient dressing for a statute acre; if used whilst fresh, it should be largely diluted with water.

Drumhead or Scotch Cabbage, which was sown as directed in August, should now be planted in well-manured drills, 2½ feet apart, and 2½ feet plant from plant in the drills. If the land be good and well prepared, an immense weight, often 60 tons per Irish acre, of most excellent food for milch cows, sheep, and young stock, may thus be raised. It will be off in time for wheat.

Cut Turf for Fuel.—The earlier in the month this can be done, the better; cut at a late period, bad weather may render it difficult, if not impossible, to save. The provident farmer will always endeavour to have a year's turf saved in advance, in order to guard against such a very unpleasant casualty.

Pare and burn reclaimed moor or marsh land. Do not burn good loamy land, as is too much the custom in districts where farming is not understood; the practice is contrary to law and to the interest of the farmer himself if he intend to occupy the farm for some years. Tracts of what was once the finest land in Ireland may be seen in the county Roscommon, and elsewhere in the west, that have been so far reduced, by being burned, for con-acre potatoes, that a life-time is not long enough to restore them.

Summer Rape for Seed may still be sown, either on good upland or on moor which has been pared and burned. In this case spread the ashes, plough them in, and harrow the ground fine. Sow 20 lbs. of seed per Irish acre, and roll the ground.

Meadows.—Gather off any stones, clods, &c., which may have been brought on in top-dressing; bush, harrow, and roll, so as to leave no obstacle to the scythe in mowing.

Top-dress Cows.—During this month, if the weather be moist, or at any time previously, should the appearance of the crop indicate either poverty or the appearance of slugs, wire-worms, &c., some of the following stimulants may be applied, by scattering them evenly on the surface late in the evening, viz.:—A mixture of salt, soot, and ashes, at the rate of from 5 to 10 cwt. of each per acre, Irish, or lime and salt, from 5 to 10 cwt. each; this should have been mixed some days previously, and the mass two or three times turned; or guano from 2 to 4 cwt., according to the necessity for manure, mixed with ten times its weight of dry earth. When the object is rather to encourage the growth of clover, this has, in some instances, been attained, by scattering even a couple of cwt. of gypsum per statute acre on the surface; but if a good system of farming be pursued, and the land be well prepared, these aids will not be required, and the ravages of slugs and the wire-worm can be checked, or rather we should say, prevented by the application of the clod-crusher.

The Cattle, we need scarcely observe, will still require the incessant care formerly advised.

Pigs.—This is the best time for sows to litter: the vetches, clover, and thinnings of carrots and parsnips will be ready for the young pigs as soon as weaned, and on this food they will thrive well throughout the summer.

Irrigated Meadows.—These, if well-situated, if the water be good, and due attention have been bestowed on them, will now be sufficiently grown to afford most acceptable pasture to ewes and lambs. After they have eaten it down, the water may be admitted for about ten days or a fortnight, after which it may be finally withdrawn for the summer.

MAY.

Swedish Turnips should be sown in this or early in the ensuing month. When sown about the middle of the present month, provided the state of the land and the weather be favourable, larger bulbs and a greater produce may be expected, than if sown later; but early-sown turnips do not keep so well, and many think—although the contrary has been attempted to be proved—that a crop of medium sized bulbs are more valuable, even although somewhat less in weight than one composed of very large bulbs; they therefore prefer to sow some time between the first and the middle of June.

The proper place for the turnip, as well as for other green crops, in the rotation, is after corn; it does best on a deep dry loam, but any land, not excluding stiff clays or reclaimed bog, may, by draining and proper cultivation, be made to produce heavy crops. In preparation for the turnip, the stubble land should be deeply ploughed, and, if necessary, subsoiled early in autumn; or, should the land require lime (we prefer applying lime with corn crops,) it may be spread on the stubble land, which should then receive a shallow ploughing, to be followed by a deeper one across the former, in November.

In this state, the land may remain until March, when it should be grubbed or ploughed. Early in May, Finlayson's harrow should be passed through it, and all root-weeds being carefully picked, these processes, together with harrowing and rolling, are to be repeated immediately before forming the drills for sowing. The drills should be perfectly straight, and 27 inches from centre to centre; in them should be put about 26 tons per statute, equal to 40 per Irish, acre, of good and well-rotted farmyard manure; or, where a less quantity is available, the difference should be made up by scattering fine bone-dust or guano over the manure after it has been evenly spread in the drills; half the manure here advised to be used, with 3 cwt. of good Peruvian guano, per acre, or 10 bushels of bone-dust, or a mixture of one-half of each, will probably produce nearly as good a crop as the full quantity of farmyard manure.

The Best Kinds of Turnips are the Swede, of which there are numerous varieties, and of these, Skirving's improved purple-topped is probably the best. Next to the Swede in value is the Aberdeen, called also yellow bullock turnip, the proper season for sowing which is from the middle to the end of June; then Dale's hybrid, sown about the same time, and the globe, which may be sown in July.

No more drills should be opened and manured than can be sown the same day, the rapidity of vegetation, caused by the freshness of the soil, being the best preservative against the attack of the turnip fly.

The Quantity of seed usually sown is 2½ lbs. per statute, or 4 lbs. per Irish, acre. For thinning and the after-cultivation, on the due performance of which the value of the crop depends, see calendar for next month.

Kol-Rabi, or turnip-headed cabbage, is so hardy as scarcely liable to injury by the most severe frost, and the bulb standing some inches above the surface of the ground is an acceptable provision for sheep in severe weather; it is sometimes sown in a seed-bed in April, and transplanted in May or June; but a much preferable mode of cultivating it is that recommended for the Swedish turnip.

Buck-Wheat.—This crop may yield a fair return on land too light or too much exhausted to produce even a crop of oats or rye. The farmer should, however, rather endeavour to ascertain how he may best improve his land, so as to render it capable of producing valuable crops, than to find those capable of still farther exhausting it. Buck-wheat may be harrowed in after a single ploughing; about 10 stone of seed is sufficient for a statute acre, and the return may be from 5 to 8 barrels per acre. Buck-wheat is sometimes sown for the purpose of being ploughed down as a preparation for wheat.

Horse and Hand-hoe beans, potatoes, parsnips, and carrots, and thin the two latter as soon as they have attained sufficient growth. In land which has been properly prepared and well manured, the drills being 27 inches apart, parsnips may be thinned so as to stand 8 inches, and carrots 6 inches, apart, in the lines. Take special care to destroy the weeds which may spring up with these crops.

Hoe wheat and other corn crops in drills, and in which clover or grass seeds have not been sown. This work, if performed in dry weather, effectually destroys the weeds, which, when allowed to grow, abstract a large amount of the food which should go to nourish the crop, they also still farther pollute the land with their seeds; and the surface being pulverized by the hoeing, is much more retentive of moisture, and consequently, less liable to fissures than when this operation is neglected.

Mangel-Wurzel may be sown as early in the month as the land can be made ready to receive it; the place in the rotation, and the preparation of the land, and the quantity and kind of manure, are, in all respects, the same as advied in the case of Swedish turnips. The seed may be sown by a machine, or in a rut formed on the centre of the drill, with the coulter of the turnip-harrow, or with the hand-hoe, and in which the seed may be dropped 3 or 4 inches apart; at this rate, about 4 lbs. will be required per statute, or 7 lbs. per Irish, acre; or the seed may be dropped, a couple together, in holes formed by hand, or by the dibbling-machine, at 6 inches apart.

Cows.—Those who have made preparations for house-feeding, will now be supplied with Italian rye-grass and winter vetches, which will be succeeded by clover and rye-grass. With these let the cows be fed five or six times daily, the vetches and clover being cut some hours and exposed to the sun before they are used, that the air with which they are charged, and which would cause the animals to hove or burst if taken in quantity, may escape. A little hay should be given between the feeds, the cows curried daily, and great regularity observed in feeding: no more should be given at a time than the cows can consume.

Charr-Bog for Manure.—Black compact bog charred in the manner practised by country blacksmiths, in their preparation of it to be used as a substitute for coal, has been found of great value, especially after it has been saturated with tank liquid. A writer in the English Agricultural Society's Journal states, that with 24 bushels of this charred peat alone, he raised good crops of turnips and carrots.

Burn Clay in Kilns for manure. This is effected by building a wall three or four feet high with sods, with vents or arches formed of dried sods through it; fires are made in these arches, on which any combustible matter is heaped; when the fire is strong, the clay dugged from the pit will be charred; and thus any quantity of ashes or rather charred clay, may be obtained; charred clay not only acts mechanically on stiff clay land, rendering it more porous, but it affords much nutritive matter to crops.

Calcareous Gravel, which is of very general occurrence, is in a similar way converted into excellent manure.

Reclaimed Moor or marshy land may also have the rushy and sedge surface burned, or rather charred, with great advantage. Spread the ashes on the surface, reserving a portion to be put into the drills under the seed, plough them in, harrow fine, and sow yellow Aberdeen or white turnips, or potatoes.

Harrow down Potato Drills with the saddle-harrows a few days before the plants appear. This operation will destroy the seedling weeds which will have vegetated, and render the after-weeding comparatively easy.

Irrigated Meadows.—The sheep and lambs must now be removed from the water meadows, after which the water may be admitted for a week or ten days; it is then to be turned off, and the meadow shut up for hay.

The Fly is apt to attack sheep, especially in woody places. Pick out the maggots, and apply white lead. Black brimstone, in the proportion of 1½ lb. to ½ lb. of hellebore, is also recommended for the same purpose, and for keeping off the fly by dredging or dusting it over the sheep.

Wash and Shear Sheep.—Use pure soft running water for washing; then turn them into a clean pasture for two or three days, or till the wool is dry; and after shearing, wash them well with a mixture such as the following:—To each gallon of pure tobacco water, add an equal quantity of soap suds, ½ lb. of soft soap, and a pint of turpentine. Let the sheep stand in a wooden tray or trough whilst being well washed with a cloth. Should the skin be accidentally cut by the clipping-shears, smear with a bit of tar to prevent injury from flies.

JUNE.

The Dairy.—The cows will now be "at the top of their milk," and amply compensating the past and present care bestowed on them. The farmer who has advanced so far in the improved system as to house-feed his cows in summer, will see that the cow-house is kept perfectly clean and sweet; that an abundance of palatable food be supplied at short intervals, and with strict regularity; and the same or if possible still greater attention, on the part of his wife, will be required to secure the largest quantity of butter of first-rate quality. The dairy must be kept cool and well aired, the milk vessels scalded daily and left out in the air, and every utensil kept as pure as it is possible for hands and hot water to make them. If cream only is churned, the milk, immediately after being drawn from the cow, is strained into shallow wooden, earthen, or stoneware vessels, where it stands for at least 24 hours; the cream is then skimmed off and thrown into a crock in which a clean white rod stands with which the cream is stirred every time fresh is added, and the cream may stand for three or four days, or even a week, if necessary, before being churned. The temperature of the cream in churning should be 55 degrees, and the nearer the time occupied in churning cream approaches to three quarters of an hour, the better will be the butter; milk requires more than double that time in churning.

Cheese and Butter Making.—The milk should stand twenty-four hours after being drawn from the cow; the cream is then to be skimmed carefully off, and put into an earthenware vessel, until as much be collected as will churn properly. The skim-milk is then to be warmed to about 90° Fahrenheit. This can best be done by warming a portion of the milk in a large tin can, placed in a boiler containing hot water. It may be allowed to attain a temperature of 120° Fahrenheit, when it should be poured into the cold milk, which, if there be not a very large quantity, will rise to the required temperature for putting in the rennet. If it be too cold still, a pitcher filled with hot water may be put into it, until the proper temperature is obtained. If the rennet is good, curdling will take place in about a quarter of an hour after it has been put into the milk. The curd is then gently broken up, and the whey poured off as it separates from it. After the most of the whey has been poured off, the curd should be put into a clean, coarse linen cloth, and hung for a short time upon a stick placed across the top of the tub. After the whey has drained well off, the curd is to be taken out of the cloth, broken down with a mincing-knife, then a little salt mixed well with it, after which it should be returned into the cloth, then placed in a chessart or vat, and finally into the press. After the cheese has been three hours in the press, it should be taken out, the cloth removed, and a dry one put round it. It should then be turned upside down, and placed in the chessart in this position, and again subjected to pressure. These turnings should be twice repeated afterwards, at intervals of three or four hours, observing always to substitute a clean dry cloth, for the one taken away, and to invert the cheese in the chessart before putting it in the press. In the course of twenty-four hours the cheese will be perfectly firm, and should be laid on a dry airy shelf to win, observing to turn, and give it a rub with a dry towel, every day.

Land-hoe and Thin Swedish Turnips.—The after-management of the turnip crop consists in thinning and keeping down weeds. Thinning is often neglected or imperfectly performed, especially by those who have not had much experience in turnip husbandry, but this is a great mistake, for unless light and air be freely admitted, it is vain to expect a good crop; neither should the work of thinning be deferred so long as to allow the plants to become crowded. Thinning or singling is performed with turnip hoes, 6 or 7 inches wide; and to effect the destruction of seedling weeds, an inch or so of earth with the turnips and weeds growing on it, is drawn off the crown of the drill, thereby barring the roots of the remaining turnips for an inch or so, which is found rather advantageous than otherwise. The distance between the turnips must be regulated by the strength of the manure and of the ground. When both are good, 12 inches will be close enough; when only of middling quality, 10 inches may be space sufficient.

Produce.—To estimate the produce of an acre, the bulbs on two or three average perches should be cleared of tops and roots, and weighed; and as many stones weight as there are in a square perch, there are tons in an acre.

Hay-making.—This is perhaps the most important operation of the present month, and one which is by no means generally well understood. The grasses are too commonly permitted to become too ripe, by which much of their valuable qualities are lost, the in nutritious woody fibre almost alone remaining. The great effort should be so to dry the hay that it may retain a good colour and sweet flavour; and this can only be accomplished by even spreading, constant moving, and securing it from wet.

JULY.

Weeds are either of one, two, or of many years' duration; in other words, they are annual, biennial, or perennial.

Perennial weeds in cultivated land, should be gathered off by the hand or couch-harrow whenever it is ploughed, and carted off and laid in a heap to rot. Perennial weeds in grass land should be drawn up by the roots before they blossom, which is easily done after rain, and in like manner carried to the root-heap.

Annual weeds are only to be got rid of by clean-drill husbandry. The farmer should bear in mind, that it is through the medium of the leaves that the roots of plants are nourished, and consequently that if leaves are not permitted to expand, the roots will perish.

Turnips.—The sowing of Dale's hybrid, globe, tankard, or any other of the soft turnips, should be concluded as early in the month as possible; but, as we have elsewhere stated, they are but a poor substitute for Swedes.

Rape.—Pare and burn marshy ground which has been drained, scatter the ashes, plough them in, and sow rape, either to be eaten on the ground by sheep, or cut for cattle in winter or spring, or to stand for seed. The land from which vetches or early potatoes have been removed, should either be sown with turnips or rape, or planted with rape from the nursery bed sown last month.

Horse-hoe between drill crops; and the earth being well pulverized and all weeds destroyed, mould the potato drills with the double mould-board or the common plough. Many object to the usual mode of paring potato drills close with the plough, or any cutting implement, as they think that cutting the extremities of the fibres diminishes the produce; abundance of earth, however, for moulding the drills may be raised without paring close.

Hand-hoe yellow or any other turnips as they become ready. Any vacancies caused by the fly, &c., may be made good by sowing globe or stone turnip in them.

Draw home Bog-stuff.—The horses, at all leisure opportunities, should be occupied in drawing home this material, if it is to be had, to form a thick layer in the dung-yard, as well as in the yards where young cattle are kept, either in winter or summer. The piggy yards should also be supplied regularly with it; and the channels behind the cows being filled with it fresh every evening, the urine will convert it into excellent manure. By changing it in this way, it will not be objectionable in the best kept cow-house. A few tons of night-soil mixed with bog-stuff, will convert an immense mass of it into valuable manure, especially if it be moistened occasionally with liquid manure from the tank.

Stack Turf.—This work should be completed before harvest.

The Cows having now abundance of food, we shall only remind the farmer to see that they are plentifully and regularly supplied, regularly curried, their bedding and house kept perfectly clean, and that they are let out for exercise in the cool of the evening.

AUGUST.

The Haggard.—The provident farmer will, by a close inspection, ascertain that every thing here is in order and ready for the reception of the grain, that the corn-stands, straw for thatching, ropes, carts, ladders, pitching forks, tarpaulin, &c., are in readiness, so that when the busy and anxious day arrives for getting in the corn, nothing necessary for advancing the work may have to be provided. The wasteful and slovenly practice too prevalent amongst small farmers of building their corn stacks on the ground, and leaving them badly or altogether unthatched, cannot be too severely censured.

Reaping.—The state of ripeness at which corn should be permitted to arrive before being cut, is a question which has been much discussed, and the majority of the experiments made to determine the matter lead to the conclusion, that there is considerable advantage (according to some, to the amount of 15 per cent.) in cutting all kinds of corn fully ten days sooner than by farmers in general it would be considered ripe.

Wheat, Barley, and Beans are invariably cut with the reaping-hook, and the practice of mowing oats, which is almost general in England, is also extending in this country. The scythe may be of the two-handed Scotch pattern, or the common hay scythe, to which a hoop is applied.

Grass-Seed and Clover may, with great propriety, be sown at this time in dry, rich, deep, and well-pulverized land, either alone or with rape (2 or 3 lbs. per Irish acre), which should not be permitted to overshadow the ground much; as soon as any danger to the grass begins to be apprehended, let the rape be eaten down by sheep, the manure and treading of which, in dry weather, will benefit rather than injure the grass and clover. If the land about to be laid down have borne a corn crop, some manure should be covered in with the last ploughing, or a compost, consisting of a mixture of ashes or charred bog-stuff, which was well saturated with tank liquid; or, in default of such compost, a couple of cwt. of guano mixed with half-a-dozen bushels of fine bone-dust, should be harrowed in with the seed. After a manured crop, or even after vetches, for which the land was manured, it will be sufficient to prepare the ground very well. Many experienced farmers consider that no loss is sustained by sowing grass-seed without a corn crop.—For mixtures of grass-seeds adapted to various soils, see the calendar for April.

Rape may still be sown. If on land from which corn has been reaped, some manure must be given; but a better crop will be produced, and one that will exhaust the land in a much less degree, by transplanting on rape which was sown for this purpose in June. With this view, as soon as the corn is reaped, it should be carried and stooked elsewhere, or, at all events, it should remain as short a time as possible on the ground, which, on its removal, should be deeply ploughed, and well broken down with the harrow. Drills are then to be opened in the freshly-prepared land with the plough, at two feet apart, in which women or boys place the rape plants (raised with the spade or strong fork, so as to injure the fibres as little as possible), at 15 inches plant from plant, placing a little manure, which had been previously laid down, over the roots of the rape plants; the drills are then closed by the plough, or the manure may be covered in the drills, as if for turnips, and the rape planted by hand along the crown of the drill. A large quantity of most excellent green food for cows or sheep may thus be provided, which will augment the manure heap so as to more than make up for any injury done to the land by the rape.

Lambs are generally weaned this month. A nice clover field should be ready for them, at such distance from the ewes that their bleating may not be heard. The ewes should be put on bare pasture for some days, closely attended to, and milked if necessary.

A Wash for Lambs will, in some cases, be found necessary, in order to free them from ticks. It may be prepared as follows:—

Beat up half a pound of white powdered arsenic, 4 lbs. of soft soap, in 5 gallons of water; and after it has stood some time, add as much water as will be sufficient to dip sixty lambs.

SEPTEMBER.

Winter Vetches.—The question has frequently been asked, are the winter and spring vetches really different, and if so, how the purchaser may distinguish them? We believe that they are the same variety, and that the only difference is, one has become harder than the other, by being constantly sown in the autumn; but neither the seed nor the young plants present any marks whereby to know them; and the only possible precaution is to purchase only from a respectable seedsmen; but having once procured the genuine variety, a farmer has himself to blame if he don't retain it by sowing his own seed. The earlier in the month the winter vetch is sown the better, and in dry and sheltered ground it might have been sown last month. This crop is usually sown in stubble ground, which should have manure ploughed in, or, as a substitute, a couple or 3 cwt. of guano, or 10 bushels of bone-dust, may be harrowed in with the seed; or, the ground may be improved by the application of liquid manure some short time previous to sowing, and even to the growing crop. The ground may be ploughed either flat, if it be dry, or in ridges of any convenient breadth; harrow so as to make it fine; sow at the rate of 4 bushels of vetches, mixed evenly with 2 or 3 stone of wheat to the Irish acre; cover the seed with the harrow, and shovel up the furrows. This is a most valuable crop. It will come in towards the end of April, just when it is most required, and is equally relished by horses, cattle, and pigs.

Rape may still be transplanted, as recommended last month. This most nutritious food for cattle and sheep will be ready for use in April, and be off in time for potatoes, turnips, or barley. If for the last-mentioned crop, the rape should be consumed on the ground by sheep. No industrious farmer who has once experienced the advantage of this crop will ever be without it.

Italian Rye-grass may be sown at this time, and if the ground be dry and rich, and the situation sheltered, it will be fit to be cut for soiling early in May. Four bushels will not be too much seed for an Irish acre, although half that quantity is often recommended. If the ground be not in good heart, treat it as recommended above for winter vetches. No farmer who possesses a piece of good, well-sheltered land should be without this crop. It will afford three or even four cuttings in a season; all kinds of stock are fond of it, and thrive remarkably on it.

Grass-seeds and Clover may still be sown in rich, well-pulverized, and well-cleaned land, such as has borne a crop of early potatoes, vetches, or even corn.

Composts.—If bog-stuff be within reach, the horse or horses cannot be better employed at this season than in dragging it home, before it is saturated with wet, for the purpose of forming with it a deep layer in the yard where young stock are to be wintered on turnips and straw, absorbing the urine in the cow-house, and also for forming compost heaps in alternate layers with the scourings of ditches, backs of old ditches, or even earth of headlands. If, in forming this compost heap, two or three layers (the more the better) of night-soil can be added, and the whole saturated during the winter with liquid manure from the tank, into which not only the fluid from the cattle-houses has found its way, but also soap-suds, and especially chamber-lee, &c., a compost nearly as valuable as if the whole were stable or cow-house dung, will be provided.

When bog-stuff cannot be obtained, any kind of earth may be substituted for it. Attention to the advice here given would enable the farmer to commence turnip husbandry without depriving the potatoes of their legitimate share of the manure, and the turnip husbandry properly introduced, manure in abundance would be produced.

Clover Leas, intended to be sown with wheat next month, should now be ploughed. When this has been done immediately before sowing, the heat (perhaps gases) evolved from the decomposing clover has had the effect of prematurely forcing the plants forward, thereby rendering them liable to be destroyed by the winter and spring frosts.

Fallows.—Where the ruinous system of naked fallows is still persevered in, another earth (ploughing) should now be given.

Hedges should now be trimmed. The switching knife, in the hands of a skillful labourer, is much preferable to the shears. This branch of neat farming, and of the labourer's education, is greatly neglected in this country, where, if there be hedges, instead of being kept low and trimmed, they are allowed to grow wild, injuriously shading the land, and affording retreats for birds, which prey on the crops.

Stock.—At some of the fairs famous for a good breed of cattle, the farmer will, at this season, lay in his bullocks or heifers for stall-feeding, his wedders for fattening on turnips, and his breeding ewes. To do this with advantage, he should have studied the points which indicate the qualities desirable for these animals to possess. A high-boned, flat-sided, staring-coated beast will consume more food than one of the same weight possessing the opposite fattening qualities, but will not return one-half the profit. Buy in a good condition; or, at least, let the beasts be what some farmers would call fat by the 1st of November, when they are tied up.

OCTOBER.

Ploughing.—The farmer's life is one incessant round of anxious exertion. No sooner is the crop of one year secured than the time has arrived for making preparation for that of another. Amongst these, ploughing claims the first attention, as, in order to have the land prepared for the invaluable "stolen crops" of vetches and transplanted rape, it is necessary to commence ploughing the moment the corn can be removed. The ploughing of stubble land intended for cropping next year, but which requires draining, will have to be deferred until softened by the autumnal rains, but that which is naturally dry, or has been effectually drained and subsoiled, cannot be ploughed one day too soon; the growth of weeds will thereby be checked, and time will be afforded for the decomposition of both weeds and stubble. This ploughing should be given in the direction of the ridges if the land require draining, across or in a diagonal direction if dry, and with a deep furrow, so as to bring a portion of the subsoil to the surface, where the alkaline, saline, mineral, and even organic ingredients in its composition, coming in contact with the oxygen of the atmosphere, will undergo changes by which they will be converted from noxious into nutritive matters.

On strong tenacious soils, a pair of strong horses ought to plough a statute acre in 9 hours; and on the same land, after the first ploughing, or on light soils, an acre and a half is considered only a fair day's work.

Subsoiling.—Land which is naturally dry, but not sufficiently deep, or which has been thorough drained at least 12 months, may now be deepened. This is effected either by the subsoil plough or by the spade, fork, or pick; but when there are no great impediments to the progress of the plough—such as large stones, roots of trees, or too great steepness of the ground—the subsoil plough is by far the most efficacious and economical implement. Being constructed without a mould-board, it does not bring any of the subsoil to the surface, but following in the track of the common plough, across the line of the drains, loosens and breaks the subsoil to the depth of 20 inches from the surface, thereby rendering it permeable to the water which falls on the surface, and to the roots of plants, and so far changing its nature through the influence of the admitted air, as to render it (the subsoil) suitable for being brought by degrees to the surface, and mingled with the workable soil.

Wheat on Lea.—The practice of sowing wheat on clover-lea, or on grass-land, is not so general in this country as in England. Grass-land may be prepared for wheat merely by ploughing as for oats, sowing broadcast, harrowing, and shovelling the furrows, or by first turning over the grass with a shallow furrow, allowing it to dry, and then harrowing until the sods are finely divided and the earth shaken from them, and then ploughing with a deep furrow so as to cover the broken sods; this is what is called rag-fallow, and is considered an excellent practice. The furrow-presser (a kind of roller), is used in England for closing the apertures between the furrow slices in lea, and thus preventing the seed descending too deep; whether the land be pressed or the same object be effected, as is sometimes done by a light harrowing, the seed is sown broadcast, and covered by harrowing lengthwise, and generally shovelling the furrows.—The other methods of wheat-sowing will be found treated of in next month's calendar.

Rains and Pit Potatoes.—Every effort should be made to have this work performed during the dry weather which generally occurs in this month. Formerly it mattered little how potatoes were stored, they were found safe in the pits when opened in spring, but latterly every precaution is required, and not unfrequently resorted to in vain, to keep them safely. The best way is to store them in narrow clamps on the surface of dry ground, covering with clean dry straw, or with a sod next the potatoes, over which, or over the straw, 5 or 6 inches of earth may be put loosely and thatched with straw. Where dry turf-mould, dry ashes or dry charcoal, or even very dry earth can be obtained, they or any of them may be mixed with the potatoes; the pits should be examined from time to time. Drill potatoes may be raised either with the plough or potato fork; many consider the latter, although requiring more hands, the more economical method. When the plough is used, the drill is turned over, the potatoes exposed by the plough are picked off, men follow with forks throwing out any which the plough covered, and in this way a plough, seven men with forks, and twenty-one pickers, viz., two before and one after each forker, will clear two Irish acres of ground in a day.

Plant Potatoes.—Those who possess dry ground in situations not greatly exposed, should now plant the general crop of potatoes. It has long been observed, that potatoes which are left in the ground when the general crop was removed, provided they were covered with 5 or 6 inches in depth of earth, were sure to grow, not being injured by ordinary frosts; and acting on this knowledge, experience has shown that, even during the years that the potato disease has been so virulent, those planted in October have in a great measure escaped injury. We would, therefore, strongly urge the planting of at least a portion of the crop at this time, and the remainder not later than the middle of March; and we would also, during the continuance of the disease, avoid the use of strong putrescent manure, and, as a substitute, would use a compost of fresh earth and charred peat, or clay mixed with lime, salt, road scrapings, &c., and if the ground be so poor that rich manure is absolutely necessary, it should be so well rotted as to have almost become earth.

Potatoes may be planted either by the spade or plough. If the land be as dry as it ought to be, the crop should be planted in drills 27 inches from centre to centre, and the sets, which should be of a good size, or medium sized whole potatoes, dropped on the compost at from 12 to 14 inches apart, according to the strength of the ground; the covering should be at least 8 inches over the sets, a portion of which may be drawn off by means of the saddle-harrows immediately before the plants reach the surface.

When planted by the spade in lary-beds, the ground should be digged, the compost spread on the surface, and the sets laid in lines 16 inches apart across the beds; the sets being 10 inches apart in the lines, and as before advised, the covering should be deep.

Ewes should now receive the tup. Choose a breed adapted to the circumstances of the farm. If it be hilly, the Cheviot is best; if the situation be low and the land dry and good, the improved Leicester, or a Leicester tup and the top lots of the Ballinasloe ewes should be provided.

To insure a fruitful lambing season, both ewes and tups should be in fair condition, but neither should be fat; if in low condition it will be advantageous to put them for some time previously on a field of rape, and abundance of the same nutritious food should be provided for the lambing time.

Sheep Breeding, although a highly important branch of farming, is sadly neglected in this country, as is evinced by the wretched animals of this class exhibited for competition at even the great national shows. The following extract on this subject, from Mr. Spooner's valuable work on the breeding and management of the sheep, will, we are sure, be acceptable to our readers:—"The improvement of the sheep, by means of breeding," observes Mr. Spooner, "requires very considerable and long continued care. The qualities of both parents must be considered, both with a view of correcting bad as well as perpetuating good qualities. It must be acknowledged, however, that in the majority of cases the influence of the male preponderates over that of the female, and the characteristics of the former are more likely to be impressed on the offspring than those of the latter. This is shown in most animals. The mule partakes much more of the nature and the size of its sire the ass, than of its dam the mare. A large Cotswold ram put to a Down ewe produces an offspring much more resembling the former than the latter; and a pony-mare put to a full-sized horse will produce an animal half as large again as the dam. Though this, however, appears to be Nature's rule, it is not one without exception, for occasionally we see the very opposite results. In breeding animals of a pure kind, the principal rule to be observed is to breed from the very best of both sexes, to cull the faulty ones every year, saving only the female lambs, for the future flock, that are as free from defects as possible; of course the flock must be kept up to its proper size, but year by year the finest animals should be selected, until, in the course of time, the flock will entirely consist of them. Until this is nearly accomplished, it will not be prudent for a farmer to employ his own tups for the purpose, as he will probably be able to hire superior rams from others, and it will not do to spare some expense in thus raising the character of his sheep. The practice of letting tups is not so profitable as it once was, owing to the extension of improvement throughout a number of districts, and thus further improvement is rendered easier and cheaper. There are various points that are sought after by breeders, not because of the particular value of those points, but because they are evidence of other valuable qualities, such as aptitude to fatten, and early maturity. Thus, in the South Down breed, small heads and legs, and small bones, are esteemed, as they are qualities which are found connected with fattening properties. Black muzzles and legs are also valued, probably because they denote the good constitution and hardihood of the animal. We must, however, take care lest, in carrying these points to an extreme, we neglect other valuable qualities. Straightness of the back, breadth of the loins, and rotundity of frame, are points which cannot be disputed, and are not merely signs of good qualities, but good qualities themselves. The straightness of the back, so perfect in the Leicester, is by no means natural to the South Down in an unimproved state, but rather the contrary. In the improved breeds, however, it is present, and is justly regarded as an excellent point, giving a better surface for the laying on of flesh, and affording larger scope for the abdominal organs. Its converse too, a round or convex back, is produced or increased by the effects of poverty and cold, and is almost sure to follow if the breed is neglected and exposed."

Cattle.—The house-fed cows must be supplied with succulent food, otherwise their milk will rapidly decrease at this season; the clover and Italian rye-grass, if properly managed, will still be fresh, but if it should be at all hard, the lower leaves of the mangel, which has now nearly finished its growth (otherwise it would be very wrong to touch them), or the thinnings of rape may be given.

Farm horses now turning over the stubble or ploughing lea for wheat, should be well fed, and now, as at all times, carefully groomed and attended to. A stone of good oats and two stone of good hay may be stated to be the full allowance for a horse of ordinary size; the hay may be economized, if the work be not very hard, by substituting a portion of bean or oatmeal, or even wheat straw, cut into chaff, and a portion of the oats; the oats by the substitution of a feed of raw carrots or boiled potatoes or Swedes, made into a dry mash with the chaff, as the evening meal. When oats is given whole, a considerable portion of it passes through the intestines of the horse without being digested; it should therefore invariably be bruised.

Pigs intended for fattening, should now receive steamed potatoes, parsnips, carrots, or Swedish turnips, and bean, pea, Indian, or oatmeal. Their sty should be kept dry and clean, their troughs should also be sweet, clean, and their food given with great regularity. Those who, believing the pig to be a dirty beast, are careless how he is attended to in these respects, will find to their cost that they are greatly mistaken. The rinsing of dairy vessels, the refuse carrots and mangel, and a few raw potatoes will keep stores in a growing state during the winter; and their sty should be so arranged that they may be allowed to root amongst the compost in the dung-yard, from which, while they mix and turn it, they obtain grubs, &c.

Irrigation.—As soon as the after-grass has been eaten off, water may be admitted, preparatory to which the leads and drains must be examined and any injuries sustained from the treading of cattle, &c., repaired; the water may continue on for a fortnight. This is also a proper season for forming new water-meadows; every available stream should be applied to this purpose, by the farmer, as the certain means, when properly executed, of rendering his land profitable. The principles of irrigation consist in freeing the land completely from stagnant water, never allowing the water to lie stagnant on any part of the land, and turning it off and putting it on with regularity; with these precautions almost any kind of water will be found serviceable, but that which washes a town or into which manure flows, is of course the best, next to it is clear water, which has passed through a cultivated country; pure spring water is also excellent, but bog water is of little value.

NOVEMBER.

Mangel-Wurzel.—The potato crop having been secured, the storing of mangel-wurzel, turnips, carrots, parsnips, and cabbage, should be proceeded with; the leaves of the mangel having been consumed by the cows, young cattle, and pigs, the roots are to be raised, their tops cut off a little above the crown of the root, and the straggling roots being also removed, the roots are to be clamped in an airy place; the clamp may be 5 or 6 feet wide, carried up to a height of about 5 feet, and thatched with straw.

Turnips may be clamped in the same way, also in an open place, as they never keep so well if piled against a wall or in a house. The leaves of Swedish turnips may be given to cows or to young cattle; they may be mown off immediately before the turnips are raised, and the raising may be performed with the plough, but the more usual practice, and the best where the quantity of turnips is not very great, is, to pull them and cut off the tops and tails with a knife, which may be made of a piece of old scythe.

Carrots and Parsnips are raised with the fork or spade, assisted, if sown in drills, by the plough taking a slice away from them; they should be pitted or put into a cellar or house, and have a quantity of sand or of turf-mould mixed with them.

Cabbage may be hung up in a house, or clamped and covered with straw, over which a few inches of earth should be put; it is essential to the safe keeping of this and all other crops, that they be stored in a dry state, and that rain and frost be excluded.

Wheat Sowing.—The root-crops having been removed, wheat-sowing is to be proceeded with. This may be performed in various ways: first, the ground may be harrowed, all stalks, leaves, and weeds picked off, the wheat sown broadcast on the surface and ploughed in with a light furrow of 4 or 5 inches in depth, or the ground may be ploughed in the direction of the fall of the ground, the wheat sown broadcast, covered by a double turn of the harrow, and the furrows either shovelled or not; if the land be at all wet the shovelling must not be omitted, or the land may be ploughed either in the direction of or across the fall, and being harrowed, may be sown with the drilling machine; or ribs (furrows) being formed at 10 inches apart with a light plough or with the ribbing machine, the seed is sown broadcast and harrowed lengthwise. These are the methods usually practised in sowing wheat.

Dribbling Wheat is extensively practised in England, but only experimentally in this country. The land being prepared as directed, in the case of the drilling machine being used, a dibble formed of a piece of stick about 2 inches square and 2 feet long, having 5 teeth, 4 inches apart, and 3 inches long, fastened in it, and having a handle $\frac{3}{4}$ feet long, is used for making holes for the reception of the seed; it is pressed into the ground with the foot, and being withdrawn, two seeds are deposited in each hole, covered either with the feet of those who drop it, or by dragging a rake or a brush-harrow over the ground. The sowing of seed is the principal object of dribbling. A bushel of wheat weighing 65 lbs., contains about 700,000 seeds, which, at 4 inches hole from hole in the lines, and the lines 9 inches apart, and 2 seeds in each hole, a bushel would be sufficient for 2 English or $1\frac{1}{2}$ Irish acres.

Quantity of Seed.—The advocates of thin sowing consider one bushel ($\frac{1}{4}$ stones), an ample allowance for a statute acre of any kind of land fit to grow wheat, whilst in general three times that quantity is not considered too much. The quantity of seed depends greatly on the nature and state of the ground, and the season of the year when sown; less is required when sown in autumn than in spring. For good ground 10 stone per statute, or 16 per Irish, acre, is perhaps more than enough, whilst for light land 14 stone per statute, or 22 per Irish, acre, is not considered too much.

Kinds of Wheat are very numerous, upwards of 200 named varieties having been described. Of these the following are amongst the best:—White: Scotch pearl, Hopetoun, white Kent and Hunter's white. Red: Spalding's prolific, red Kent, red Lammes, and marigold.

Pickle for Wheat previous to Sowing.—This is for the purpose of destroying any seeds of smut which it is supposed may possibly be attached to the wheat. Eggs of minute insects may even be attached to it, which it may also be desirable to destroy. With this view, it is dipped or steeped for a short period in salt and water sufficiently strong to float a potato, or in stale chamber-lye in which it is merely immersed, and then dried by mixing it with newly-slaked lime. The coat of lime, it is conceived, is useful both in preventing the attacks of grubs, &c., in the soil, and for affording nourishment to the germinating grain.

Stall-feeding.—The cattle intended for fattening, should be tied up before the weather becomes severe, otherwise they will fall off in condition. If there are any white, or yellow turnips, they should be first consumed, but little improvement in condition will be experienced in the cattle, until they are put on Swedes. Chemical research appears to have demonstrated, that a portion of the food of warm-blooded animals goes to produce heat, and that action produces a waste in the animal frame; from which it follows, that in order to produce the greatest weight of fat meat, the animal should be kept warm, and at rest. The house, although warm to the point just below that which produces sensible perspiration, should be well ventilated, the food should be given at the same hour every day, the usual practice being to give one feed at daylight, one at noon, and one at dusk. An ox will consume about the weight of one of his quarters, of turnips daily, or about $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb. for each stone of live weight, together with a stone of hay, or two of straw, in addition to which some give from a quarter of a stone to 10 or 12 lbs. of oil-cake, or the same weight of coarsely ground oats, or bean meal, daily; the manure is greatly improved by such feeding, but the beef seldom pays for any thing better than raw Swedish turnips, and oat straw, and 3 or 4 lbs. of pea or bean meal daily. Mr. Stephenson, of Whitelaw, East Lothian, in a most valuable paper published in the 12th volume of the Highland Society's Transactions, gives it as the result of a series of accurate experiments, that oil-cake cannot be profitably given to cattle, and that potatoes which can be sold for 1s. 6d. per cwt. are not profitable food. "Whoever," says Mr. Stephenson, "feeds on turnips, and hay or straw, will not have cause to regret that he did not use more costly food, and this opinion I give as the result of greater experience than has fallen to the lot of most other men."

Comparative value of farm produce as food for cattle.—In the following table, the gluten represents the fleshing, and the starch and gum the fattening power of the crops—

An Acre of	Gluten, Albumen, &c.	Starch, Gum, Sugar, and Fat.	Water.
	lbs.	lbs.	lbs.
Carrots, or 25 tons, . . .	1,120	5,800	47,600

Oat straw, or 2,700 lbs., . . .	36	970	324

It is stated that an ox or cow requires 2 lbs. of hay daily for each 100 lbs. of its live weight, to maintain it in a fair healthful condition; that if worked, 2½ lbs. per 100 lbs. of live weight are required; and that to fatten such it will require 4 lbs. daily per 100 lbs. live weight. Now, if this be correct, and if we know the nutritive power of other crops as compared with hay, we shall possess a clue to enable us to determine the quantity of each kind of food required to support and to fatten cattle. With this view we make an extract from a table published by Bousingault, as the result of many investigations. He states that the following quantities are equivalent to 100 lbs. of average natural meadow hay, viz. :—

Sheep-feeding.—The house-feeding of sheep in winter, and the supplying them with oil-cake and other expensive food, has recently been extensively tried, and, it is said, with economical results, whilst others are of opinion that mutton, at present and prospective prices, will not pay for any thing better than hay and Swedish turnips.

Irrigation.—Attend to water meadows; see that the water flows evenly over the surface, and does not stagnate in any part, and also that when the water is taken off, the ground will at once become dry. There is no greater mistake than to suppose, that, because running water promotes the growth of grass, stagnant water must therefore be useful. On the contrary, as every experienced farmer is aware, it would convert the best pasture into an useless marsh.

DECEMBER.

The Milch Cows, secure in their comfortable and cleanly-kept byres, neither shivering by the back of a ditch, nor poaching the land in their vain efforts to procure the food necessary to supply the vital warmth and the waste caused by such exertion, must, as before recommended, be plentifully and regularly supplied with a variety of good food. A little hay or sweet oat straw should be given the first thing in the morning, say at daylight, which they may be eating while the byre is being cleaned out, and themselves curried and wiped down; then, a feed of mangel, potatoes, or turnips, a mixture of all which would be better, sliced with the machine and mixed with some fresh chaff or cut straw, and given raw or (much better) cooked. Of this a good-sized cow may receive a couple of stone weight; after the feed give a little fresh and sweet oat straw; repeat this feed at 9, at 12, at 3, and at 6 in the evening, and if the first and last feeds be cooked, the intermediate ones may very well be raw. Oaten, barley, pea, or bean straw, chaffed by the machine, moistened with jelly formed by boiling, for some minutes, 1 lb. of linseed meal to a gallon of water, pressing the mass together, and giving it when luke-warm, forms an excellent species of food for milch cattle; if to the linseed some bean, barley, or pea meal be added, an economical substitute for foreign oil-cake for stall-feeding cattle will be provided.

Young Cattle.—The absurdly ruinous practice, formerly almost general, and still unfortunately too common, of permitting young cattle to starve in a straw yard, most likely without a shed, or in the bleak and bare pastures, is, we trust, gradually disappearing. Young animals not only require, in common with those that are full grown, food to supply the natural warmth and the waste caused by exertion, but also to be converted into bone and muscle. They therefore require a more abundant supply of good food; and the intelligent farmer who provides a dry warm shed, and abundance of Swedish turnips and fresh sweet oat straw, for his young cattle, and thereby keeps them in good condition, will find his care amply repaid and be in no hurry to return to the old starving system.

Horses.—The days being now short, and the horses probably not so severely worked as in the spring or autumn, a portion of the corn required at those seasons may now be withdrawn, and carrots, potatoes, or Swedish turnips, raw or cooked, and, in either case, mixed with oat, wheat, or bean straw, cut into chaff, may be substituted. The condition of medium-sized horses, even when at fair work, may be maintained by such food given in the proportion of 4 stone of carrots, potatoes, or Swedish turnips, and a couple of stone of the chaff, mixed with about 4 lbs. of bruised beans or crushed oats, as the daily allowance. Furze, where it can be obtained, is, when bruised, excellent winter feeding for horses, and even for cows. A horse will work well and continue in good condition on 3 stone of bruised furze, 7 lbs. of oats, and a stone of hay, as his daily allowance.

Sheep.—If the means do not exist of housing sheep in severe weather, see that their racks are well supplied with sweet hay, and their troughs with cut Swedish turnips, and that they have shelter, and, above all things, dry land to lie on. Wet land or starvation will infallibly entail rot, scab, and death.

Pigs.—In his treatment of these, in common with the whole of the domestic animals, the farmer should ever bear in mind, that warmth and rest are equivalents to a certain extent for food. Let the fattening pigs' sty, then, be warm and well supplied with clean litter. Young pigs may, for exercise, be allowed to root amongst the litter of the dung-yard, but should have clean dry sties to retire to. Their food may consist of garbage, plentifully supplied, such as carrots, parsnips, refuse potatoes, mangel, &c.; but the fattening stock should have potatoes, parsnips, or Swedes, cleanly cooked, and mixed with some bean, pea, or oat meal.

Manure.—The farmer may drain, deepen, and cultivate his land as he will, but unless he also manure it, it will, however excellent it may originally have been, in the long run become barren. The reason of this, science has discovered to be, that every kind of plant abstracts from the soil and appropriates to itself certain saline, earthy, and mineral matters, which are essential to its perfect development; and as no soil contains an indefinite quantity of each of these matters, but, on the contrary, almost every soil is deficient in one or other of them, it follows, that, to maintain fertility, it is necessary that the essential matters thus abstracted be restored.

Chemists are at present earnestly engaged in endeavouring to ascertain what are the essential ingredients in the food of cultivated crops, in the hope that when this shall have been determined, the farmer who is acquainted with the constituents of his soil, may be able, at a small cost as compared with the present mode of manuring, to supply the matter in which it may happen to be deficient. Until this discovery shall have been made, the farmer's main-stay must continue as heretofore to be farm-yard manure; and who suffers none of it to be wasted, and applies it with judgment, will find himself little beholden to extraneous manures. With this view, every drop of the urine from his cow-house, stable, &c., and especially from his dwelling-house, should find its way to the liquid manure tank, to be used in saturating compost or watering grass-lands. The manure from his cattle-houses should not lie exposed to the sun and air, by which its most valuable ingredient, ammonia, would be exhaled, or to rain or stagnant water, by which its soluble parts would be washed away, but be drawn, as made, to the field when it will be required, or to some other convenient place; and having prepared a stratum of turf-mould or dry earth, to absorb any moisture which may ooze from it, form it into a dunghill, and protect its sides and top from the action of the weather by a coat of earth. This dunghill will be the fit recipient of the weeds (collected before they blossom), the scourings of ditches, road-scrappings, &c., &c. By drawing the loaded carts on it whilst being made, rapid fermentation will be prevented, and all its valuable qualities will be preserved.

Liquid Manure.—Those who allow this substance, so rich in every thing necessary to sustain vegetation, to flow to waste, are losing the most valuable part of the manure which should enrich their land. The analysis of urine will explain this. According to Sprengel, in one thousandth part of cow's urine, although nine hundred and twenty-six are water, of the remaining seventy-four parts, forty are urea (an organic substance containing a large portion of nitrogen), and the remainder ammonia, potash, soda—alumina, lime, magnesia, silica, with albumen, mucus, chlorine, sulphuric, phosphoric, and other acids. When it is considered, says Liebig, that with every pound of ammonia which evaporates, a loss of sixty pounds of wheat is sustained, and that, with every pound of urine, a pound of wheat might be produced, the indifference with which these liquid excrements are regarded, is incomprehensible.

Chemical Manures.—Their composition, and the quantity usually applied per statute acre.

Carbonate of ammonia; 100 lbs. contain, ammonia, 44, and carbonic acid, 56 lbs.; the quantity usually applied to a statute acre is one cwt. and a half.

Carbonate of soda; 100 lbs. contain, carbonic acid, 40, and soda, 60 lbs.; from 1½ to 6 cwt. have been applied per acre. Gypsum (sulphate of lime); 100 lbs. contain, sulphuric acid, 59, and lime, 41 lbs.; quantity to be applied, from 2 to 3 cwt. per acre.

Muriate of ammonia (sal ammoniac); 100 lbs. contain, muriatic acid, 61, and ammonia, 39 lbs.; 1½ cwt. per acre.

Nitrate of soda (duty paid); 100 lbs. contain, nitric acid, 58, and soda, 42 lbs.; 1½ cwt. per acre.

Pearl ash (impure carbonate of potash); 100 lbs. contain, carbonic acid, 36, and potash, 70 lbs.; 1½ to 2 cwt. per acre. Rape dust; quantity generally applied 7 cwt. per acre.

Saltpetre (nitrate of potash); 100 lbs. contain, nitric acid, 53, and potash, 47 lbs.; 1½ cwt. per acre.

Sulphate of ammonia; 100 lbs. contain, ammonia, 23, sulphuric acid, 53, and water, 24 lbs.; 1½ cwt. per acre.

Sulphate of magnesia (Epsom salts); 100 lbs. contain, magnesia, 36, and sulphuric acid, 65 lbs.; 1½ cwt. per acre.

Sulphate of soda (glauber salts); 100 lbs. contain, soda, 46, and sulphuric acid, 54 lbs.; 3 cwt. per acre.

Remove crooked useless Fences and form new ones.—A large extent of the arable land in this country is occupied by grippes and ditches, which are of little use either as drains or fences; on the contrary, being crooked, and forming small irregular fields, they cause too frequent turning in working the land, and become receptacles for weeds, rats, rabbits, &c. One of the first steps towards the improvement of a farm, should be to render the land occupied by these useless fences available; and with this view, the ditch should be cleaned out, a drain formed in it, and the earth levelled in.

Plash old Hedges.—This is a good time to perform this work. The thorns may be cut down to the surface of the ground, and any wants or vacancies which occur in them, made good with good transplanted three-year-old thorn plants, first digging away the old ditch, and applying manure or good compost with them; or where a fence cannot be dispensed with, a foot of the top of the ditch may be removed, the old thorns cut down to within a foot of the surface, leaving branches to be bent into the gaps; the scouring from the bottom of the ditch is then to be thrown up in place of the removed top of the bank. But the best fence, and that which occupies least ground, is the ground hedge. For this purpose the white thorn is the most useful; and although seedlings of one or two years old will, if they be kept free from weeds, ultimately form as good a fence as older plants, yet, as this is so seldom attended to, we prefer using four-year-old transplanted thorns. In forming this kind of fence (the only one, except a wall, admissible in a well-managed farm), let the ground on which it is to be formed be trenched, and some manure added; place the thorns 6 to 9 inches apart in a shallow trench; put some compost on the roots, and tread the earth gently over them. These thorns will form a better fence by the time they have been four years planted, than can be had in ten years in the usual way.

During wet, frosty, or snowy weather, the flail or the threshing machine will afford employment—the implements will require repairs or painting—the harness, cleaning and oiling; and a variety of jobs, to which it is unnecessary to direct the attention of the practical farmer, should be done.

And now, in bringing our observations on farming to a close, we would earnestly recommend young farmers to adopt the nine points of good husbandry, as laid down by that excellent, practical, and scientific farmer, Mr. Hewit Davis. See Agricultural Gazette (English), 3rd vol., page 465.

1. Never be contented until all your land has been trenched and turned over by the plough at least a foot in depth, nor until—2. The wet land be made dry by deep draining, and consider no land effectually drained unless the drains be four feet in depth, that is to say, unless the water-level be so far below the surface that the corn shall have at least a foot of dry earth to root in, unaffected by the capillary attraction of the moisture from below, and the other injurious effects that water near to the surface causes; this can be done only by having the drain four feet from the surface. 3. For sowing of spring corn, consider that the season commences with the new year, and have no other fear than that of being too late. When the ground is dry enough, and fine enough, the sooner the seed is in the better; it will yield the more, and the liability to blight or to be beaten down will be less. 4. In sowing, drill or dibble all, and have the rows not higher than a foot between them, so as to admit of hoeing either by horse or by hand, and of hand-weeding at late periods. 5. Hoe and hand-weed all crops; let not a weed in flower be seen; ever recollect that weeds occupy space, and consume nutriment. 6. Never sow two crops of one genus in succession. 7. In apportioning the rate of seed per acre, do not lose sight of the bad consequences that must ensue if too much be sown. 8. Manure should be applied only to green or cattle crops, and never to corn. By giving it to these, the earth derives the advantage of the extra dressing that the extra growth of green food thus produced returns; but when applied to corn, the earth is so much the more exhausted by the extra growth of straw, and frequently too the grain is thereby positively injured by being beat down and blighted in the straw; it always, in fact, is made more hazardous by dressing. 9. Were farmers to buy all their manures, they would find that the cost of maintaining their land in fair heart would be about one pound per acre, per annum. This quantity of dressing, every farm in fair productive cultivation will supply of itself, if a proper use and economy be made of its material to form manure, and a due care is taken of it afterwards; but from misapplication, and a waste of the straw and fodder, and from negligence in the preservation of the dung and urine, at least half is usually lost; and the arable land of England may thus be said to be prejudiced to at least ten shillings per acre.

GARDENERS' CALENDAR.

JANUARY.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

The Vinery.—Vines now commencing to be forced, should have a layer of fermenting stable litter spread over the border; fire heat should be gradually applied at first; when the buds have well broken, and the leaves and blossoms have expanded, the thermometer may indicate 65° to 70° by day, and 56° to 60° by night; a moist atmosphere should be maintained by watering the flues, floors, &c.; all superfluous buds should be rubbed off, and the "laterals" stopped at the second joint above the fruit.

Peach-house.—Cover the border, whether within or without the house, with fermenting manure; commence the application of fire heat very gradually; watch the unfolding leaves, lest green fly should appear, in which case fumigate; after the fruit is set, syringe freely, and rub off fore-rights and all supernumerary shoots.

Prune and Nail Wall-trees, and mulch the border with well-rotted manure, which the rain will dissolve and carry down to the roots; prune gooseberry and currant bushes, and enrich the ground on which they stand with well rotted manure.

Cucumbers and Melons.—Where these are grown in dung hot-beds, a seed-box should now be prepared, and the seed sown; when the plants form the rough leaf let them be carefully transplanted, three into a pot of five inches' diameter, using earth that has been warmed in the hot-bed; water with tepid water, and shade the plants.

Mushroom-house.—Keep up a gentle heat (say 55°) and a moist atmosphere.

Early Frame or Charlton Peas and Masagan Beans.—Sow on a dry sheltered border.

Strawberries in pots, now brought into a hot-house or pit, will ripen fruit in April; the British Queen is a suitable kind for this purpose.

Potatoes.—Ash-leaved kidney potatoes now planted in a melon-pit or other frame, with moderate heat, will be fit for the table in May, and off in time to put in melon plants; if not already done, some of the same kind, or of Kempes, should be planted whole on dry ground in a sheltered situation.

Sea-bale, now covered with pots and stable litter, will be ready for use in five or six weeks.

Asparagus and Rhubarb.—Old roots raised carefully and planted in moderate heat in a pit or frame will push out leaves, the stalks of which will be ready for use in three or four weeks after planting; turf-mould or even tree leaves answer well for blanching it.

Potato Onions.—Plant in ground well manured, in lines twelve inches apart, and twelve inches one from another in the lines; cover with five or six inches of earth, which may be partly withdrawn in April.

Finish the trenching and manuring of ground, planting of fruit-trees, root and head pruning of old fruit-trees, and the extirpation of moss and lichens, by coating both trunks and branches with a thick whitewash; prepare compost for manure by collecting refuse vegetables, weeds, tree leaves, &c., which form into a heap, with alternate layers of earth, or, what is much better if they can be procured, sods from a pasture field; but whatever kind of earth be used, scatter a good layer of coarse refuse salt, which may be obtained from places where they cure bacon or fish.

Those who have superior kinds of carrots, parsnips, beet, turnips, &c., may preserve them by selecting the finest specimens, and planting them at this season in good fresh earth for seed.

FLOWER GARDEN.

Continue the digging and trenching of flower borders, dividing, and transplanting, and arranging of herbaceous plants, planting of shrubs, box edging, &c., as long as the weather continues open, and form compost heaps for future operations.

Plants in frames, such as auriculas, carnations, polyanthus, Chinese primroses, cinerarias, calceolarias, &c., should have abundance of air in fine weather, watering such of them as appear to require it; all withering leaves should be removed as they appear, and the same observations hold good with respect to greenhouse plants and hardy annuals, &c., in the cold frame.

Roses.—Asalias, Persian lilac, rhododendrons, lily of the valley, &c., taken into the stove or warm frame now, will blossom about the beginning of April.

Tulips may be protected from injury by frost by having some fern leaves placed loosely over the bed.

Auriculas and polyanthus pots may now be surfaced with compost of rich loam; let the old surface be loosened with a pointed stick, and removed to the depth of about an inch.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Planting should be pushed forward so long as the weather is favourable. We object greatly to the promiscuous mode of planting generally adopted. A more judicious method is, to plant the hard-wood trees at such distances that few of them will require to be removed. Thus, instead of planting oaks, elms, ash, sycamores, &c., at from five to seven feet apart, or nearly 2,000 to the Irish acre, we would plant them at, say, twelve feet apart, or under 600 per acre, filling up with larch as a nurse; where the soil and situation are better suited to larch than to hard-wood, it alone should be planted.

Thinning.—By no means neglect this work, so essential to the ultimate success of the plantation. Let the principal trees stand clear of the nurses.

Pruning.—The trees in plantations which have been judiciously planted and thinned require little pruning, but, if necessary, this is a good season for performing it. If possible to avoid it, never cut off a branch more than a couple of inches in diameter, and cut close to the trunk.

Nursery.—Larch and fir cones, gathered now or last month, may have the seed extracted by spreading them on a corn-kiln, over which some branches or timber has been laid to support a winnowing cloth or the like some distance above the tiles; the cones may form a layer a couple of feet in depth or more; they will open with the heat, and, being moved about, the seed will fall out; it should, when cold, be put into bags, and kept in a dry place until sowing time, in the beginning of May.

New Nursery.—When preparation has not been made, by trenching ground, and planting it with potatoes, turnips, or other green crop, well manured, and that it is desired to stock a nursery with seedlings in the ensuing spring, it is quite time to set about this work. With this view, if the subsoil be good, the ground should be trenched at least two spits deep, turning the surface to the bottom; if the subsoil be bad, a mere digging will be sufficient; but above all things, if the ground be at all damp let it be effectually drained. Whether digged or trenched, it will in general be greatly benefited by a good dose of lime, harrowed or raked in immediately, or as soon as the ground is sufficiently dry. It may be necessary to observe, that the fence of a nursery should be impassable to every beast, from a hare or rabbit to an ox or a horse. A flock of sheep, should they break in, might destroy property in a single night which would much more than pay for effectual fencing.

FEBRUARY.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

Vines.—As soon as the fruit is set, ply the syringe regularly and with force; this will keep the red spider in check, and the steam that arises will promote the healthy growth of the fruit. Stop the lateral shoots as they advance, and thin the fruit as soon as necessary. The thermometer may now indicate 70° by day, and 60° by night.

Peach-houses now in bloom or setting fruit should have air every fine day, but be shut up early, so as to dispense as much as possible with fire heat at this critical time; if the green fly or red spider make its appearance after the fruit is set, syringe freely with water in which sulphur has been mixed; stop luxuriant shoots at the fourth or fifth leaf, rub off supernumerary shoots, and tie in such as will be required.

Wall-trees.—Finish the pruning and nailing, and apply a wash of the consistence of paint to the branches, composed of clay, lime, soft soap, and tobacco water.

Melons and Cucumbers.—Use tepid water freely between the hillocks, stop the advancing shoots, fertilize setting fruit, and keep up a brisk heat by renovating the linings.

Planting and pruning of fruit trees, if not done in October and November, which was the proper season, should not be longer delayed; see that the ground is not in want of draining, and plant shallow; look over trees recently planted, and if wind-waved, break up the ground about them and fasten securely.

Peas and Beans.—Early frame and Charlton peas and Masagan beans should be sown on a dry south border, to succeed those sown in October or November; and a general crop of long-pod beans may be sown.

Cabbage, Brocoli, Savoy, Cauliflower.—A little of each of these should be sown on a warm border of dry ground for autumn use; and if the weather be open, the autumn-sown of these crops may be transplanted out into rich, well-prepared, dry ground.

Cauliflowers.—Plant out strong plants, four under each cap-glass, on rich dry ground, or in lines if the situation be warm and sheltered.

Carrots, Celery, Radishes, Mustard, and Cress.—For these procure a little artificial heat by forming a bed, three or four feet in thickness, of stable litter; cover it over with six inches of compost or light earth; sow the seeds in shallow drills, three or four inches drill from drill; cover lightly, and, as a substitute for glass, bend hoops over the bed for the purpose of covering with mats in severe weather. These may also be sown in the open ground, choosing a warm border of light rich earth.

Kidney Beans, for forcing, should now be sown in good-sized pots of rich earth.

Plantations of Jerusalem artichokes, sea-kale, asparagus, and artichokes may, if required, be made in open weather.

Celery Seed may now be sown in a slight hot-bed or on a warm border. The following excellent mode of cultivation is called the Scotch method:—In April it is transplanted into rich ground, from which, when it is about to be finally transplanted, it is raised with balls, and neither the roots nor tops are shortened. It is planted in beds well enriched with rotten manure, three lines in a bed, the lines one foot apart, and nine inches plant from plant. The first crop is planted in these beds in June, and the main crop in July. When the plants are a foot or more in height, six inches of earth may be put amongst them at once, first tying up the leaves with a little bass; this is considered preferable to the usual method of frequent small landings. Seymour's superb white is the best.

FLOWER GARDEN.

The Dahlia.—Those who desire to have an early blow of dahlias, should now prepare a hot-bed in which to "start" the roots. Some dry bog-mould, or decayed tan, or even dry earth, being laid over the dung, the roots are to be placed upon it, and a little of the mould scattered between them, so as to half cover them. Here they will soon push out shoots, which, when a couple of inches in length, may be cut off with a sharp knife, taking a bit of the old root with each shoot. Plant in small pots, which are to be placed in another frame previously prepared for them, in which the pots may stand on a layer of fine coal ashes. Here let them have on every fine day air sufficient to prevent their being drawn; and when they have filled the little pots with roots, shift them into larger.

Ranunculuses and Anemones should now be planted in rich loamy ground. Choose plump roots with prominent buds; plant in rows five or six inches apart, four or five inches plant from plant, and one one-half inch deep, and cover the bed with turf-mould, sand, or fern, to protect the roots from severe frost. Let such extra covering be removed, as soon as danger from frost is no longer to be apprehended.

Hardy Annuals.—A few may be sown in the open ground; if it be dry and the weather open, they will flower early. And both these and tender annuals may be sown in pans of fine sandy loam, and placed in a slight hot-bed. Seed of dahlias, pinks, carnations, polyanthes, auriculas, and all kinds of flowers may be treated in like manner. Care must, however, be taken not to draw them up weak; to prevent which, let the heat be very low, and give abundance of air in mild weather.

Greenhouse Plants.—Fuchsias, geraniums, salvias, verbenas, calceolarias, &c., may now be shifted from the small pots in which they stood the winter, into large pots of rich earth, for blooming.

Cuttings of salvia, pelargoniums, verbenas, African groundsel, cinerarias, calceolarias, heliotropes, fuchsias, &c., intended for the flower-beds and baskets in the open ground, should now be struck in a little heat; and seeds of these plants should be sown in pots of rich light earth, and placed in gentle warmth.

Mignonette sown now in pots, plunged into a slight hot-bed, will flower in May.

Greenhouse and Frames.—Admit abundance of air in fine weather; pick off dead and decaying leaves; and shift into larger pots, or top-dress with compost, all plants which require it. Keep pelargoniums, calceolarias, cinerarias, Chinese primroses, &c., near the glass, and, as these and all other plants will now begin to grow, let them be regularly and carefully supplied with water.

Roses.—The more tender kinds, which it would have been hazardous to prune in November, may now be pruned. Moss and Provence roses for future forcing may now be potted in well enriched soil, then plunge the pots in the open ground and mulch the surface.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Thinning Plantations.—The present, or any time from the fall of the leaf until April or May, answers equally well for this work.

With respect to thinning, the rule should be, not to allow the trees which are to remain for the principal crop of timber to be interfered with; the branches of the nearest trees should, by no means, be allowed to touch each other.

The ultimate distance at which trees should be allowed to stand, must be regulated by the kind and by the purposes for which they are intended. Oak, to become large timber, should not stand closer than twenty feet apart, whilst larch will attain a size, on an average, of a couple of tons of timber at the distance of twelve feet apart; and where the soil, situation, or other circumstances render it probable that it will not attain such dimensions, eight feet tree from tree may be space enough.

Nursery.—Haws, ash-keys, holly-berries, yew, mountain ash, service tree, &c., which have lain in the rot-heap for twelve or fourteen months, should now be sown. The ground intended for this purpose should have been prepared by trenching and planting with a highly-manured crop of turnips, cabbage, &c., and kept perfectly free of weeds. It should now be digged fine, and laid off in beds four feet wide, with alleys of fifteen to eighteen inches in width. The surface earth of the bed, to the depth of one one-half inches, being pushed back with the back of the rake into the alleys, the seed is to be sown so as nearly to touch each other, covered with the earth from the alleys, and finished by being neatly raked, and the edges of the bed straightened.

Acorns, beech-mast, hazel-nuts, Spanish and horse chestnuts, walnuts, &c., may be sown in the same way, or in broad drills with twelve inches interval. They should have at least two inches of covering.

Cut the Roots of Seedling Trees.—Young trees should never remain more than two years in the seed-bed. Sometimes however that is unavoidable, in which case, when in drills, the roots should be cut by forcing down a sharp garden spade four to six inches from the stem, and in a slanting direction, so that, by a similar operation on the other side, both cuts meet at the depth of seven or eight inches below the plant. This operation will cause thorns or other deciduous trees (we do not recommend it for fir) to form abundance of fibres, which will render them less liable to receive a check when transplanted the following season.

MARCH.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

This is a busy month in the garden, and unless exertion has been used to push forward such work as could be done in the autumn and winter months, the chances are, that many things will now be omitted or imperfectly performed, by which much loss and inconvenience will be experienced.

Vines.—Where forcing was commenced early, the fruit will now be set, after which use the syringe freely, in order to keep down the red spider; should pure water not do so, mix sulphur with it. Stop barren laterals above the first eye, and the fruit laterals at the second eye above the bunch, and thin such grapes as are sufficiently advanced. Prefer a moderate crop of good berries to a large crop of middling ones, which besides impoverish the trees: shut up the house warm in the afternoon, say at 90°. Use the syringe equally freely on the peach trees after the fruit is set; fumigate the house if the green fly make its appearance, and mix sulphur freely with the water if either mildew or red spider be apprehended; give plenty of air whenever the weather is mild, do not let the heat exceed 50° by night; rub off superfluous shoots, and see that the fermenting litter on the borders retains a good heat.

Melons and Cucumbers.—Keep up the heat of the beds with fresh linings; stop the laterals; admit air daily; set the fruit, and water when needful. Seeds of melons and cucumbers sown now, and the plants shifted from time to time into larger and larger pots, will prove useful for planting out into slight hot-beds, where they will fruit freely.

Fruit-tree blossoms on the open walls may be protected from frost by a double fold of woollen netting; spruce branches or any thing which obstructs light is injurious, a nine-inch board fixed on as a temporary coping will intercept the perpendicular frost, and assist greatly in protecting the blossoms.

Full crops of most kinds of vegetables must be sown as early in the month as the state of the weather and ground will permit.

Peas.—Woodford's or others of the marrows may now be sown, in lines at wide intervals, and crop the ground between.

Beans.—Long-pod and Windsor are good kinds for this season.

Onions.—Sow the principal crop. The ground for onions should be a rich, dry, deep loam, manured highly in the autumn, or for a crop of celery last season. If grubs or worms be apprehended, lime and salt, or soot, salt, and guano, say a stone of the latter to four stone of soot and an equal quantity of salt, should be spread on, say ten square perches of ground, first raked and then lightly pointed in, and this should be done some days before the seed is sown; the ground being laid out in beds, the seed may be sown thin in shallow drills, ten inches drill from drill.

Carrots.—This crop does best in deep sandy or moory ground, which has been made rich by manuring for the previous crop, or by having dung digged into it in autumn. The ground should be forked up, broken very fine, and dressed with the materials (to guard the crop against worms or grubs) recommended above for onions, and sown in drills fifteen inches apart. Keep down weeds, and when the plants have acquired sufficient strength, thin to two inches plant from plant, and by degrees as the young carrots are used to five or six inches.

Parmsips require a deep rich loam; sow as directed for carrots; thin to six or seven inches plant from plant.

Potatoes.—A few ridges of some early kind, such as ash-leaved kidney or Kemps, may be planted in the beginning of the month, in dry ground.

Cabbage.—Plant out the autumn-sown plants for use in June and July, and sow a little imperial or Wellington for autumn use.

Cauliflower and lettuce plants, which were protected in frames or under a wall, &c., may be lined out in rich dry ground.

Turnips.—A little early Dutch may be sown in the beginning of the month. Most of it will probably run to seed; some more should, therefore, be sown towards the middle, and a considerable quantity at the end of the month. Sow also spinach, leeks, parsley, radishes, lettuce, celery, mustard, cress, &c.

Asparagus.—The rotten dung which was spread on the surface in November should now be forked in, care being taken not to injure the crown of the plants. Fresh plantations may also, if required, be made. A deep sandy loam is required to grow this plant to perfection. It should be prepared by trenching the ground to the depth of at least two feet, burying at the same time a large quantity of the best manure, and mixing sea-sand with the ground if not already very loose. Lay off the beds four and a half feet wide; draw three drills, the outer six inches from the edge of the bed, and sow the seed thinly; the plants may be allowed to stand fifteen inches apart in these drills; or, open drills six inches deep, and plant two-year old plants, so that the crown of the roots may be an inch below the surface. Drench the beds with liquid manure, in which some salt may be dissolved during the growing season.

Artichoke Plantations.—The manure spread on the surface in winter should be forked in, and the same will be required whenever this excellent plan has been adopted, whether in strawberry plantations, the plots of small fruit bushes, or over the roots of wall or standard fruit trees.

Rhubarb and Sea-bale plantations may now be made; choose a rich, deep, and dry piece of ground, in a situation out of sight of the principal walks, and plant three plants in a cluster in the centre of each square of five feet.

Jerusalem Artichokes.—Make plantations of these also; plant in lines eighteen inches apart, and twelve inches in the lines.

Grafting.—The beginning of the month is a proper time for this work. By means of this art, which is too well understood to require description, not only the best kinds of fruits, but a great variety of beautiful shrubs and forest trees may be obtained at little or no expense. Of the genus thorn alone, there are more than twenty beautiful varieties.

FLOWER GARDEN.

Carnations which were wintered in pots in frames, in the greenhouse, or under the shelter of a fence, may now be planted into beds or pots for flowering. The soil should be a fresh loam, enriched with rotted cow-dung, or hot-bed dung and sand; form the beds four and a half feet wide, and plant four lines of plants, fifteen inches apart in the lines. Wire-worms are fond of this plant. To prevent injury, some persons who have good kinds, pound the whole of the earth and compost with a mallet previous to using it. A few potatoes or slices of carrot buried beneath the surface, and near the plants, will attract the wire-worm, the traps should be examined every morning, and the insects found in them destroyed. It is said that guano (which mixed in small quantity with bone-dust, and applied a month before the plants are put out, is an excellent manure for this and most florists' flowers) will keep off the wire-worm.

Arvioulas, in frames, may receive genial showers—they should be shaded from hot sun and be regularly watered; a little liquid manure, such as water in which sheep-droppings have been steeped, may be given occasionally.

Annals.—These beautiful and interesting plants may now be sown in the open ground, which should be rich and light. The best way to sow their seed is in round patches, so as that each can be covered with a fourpenny flower-pot, which should be turned down over the seed as soon as sown, and not removed until it is up, when the pot should be supported so as to admit light. When the plants are sufficiently strong the pot may be removed, and the plants thinned out so as to stand some inches apart; these being transplanted in moist weather, will flower somewhat later than those not disturbed.

Ranunculuses may still be planted; and those already planted should be regularly watered, if in dry weather.

Tigridias, Commelinas, Tropaeolums, and such plants, should be planted in the beginning of the month.

Auriculas will now begin to grow; they should, therefore, have plenty of air and more water. This is the proper time for top-dressing with compost.

Tender Annuals may be sown in pots or seed-pans on a slight hot-bed; here may also be sown seeds of all kinds of florists' flowers, such as dahlia, auricula, polyanthus, carnation, pink, ranunculus, Chinese primrose, cineraria, calceolaria, fuchsia, balsam, cockscomb, &c.

Cuttings of pelargoniums, verbenas, heliotropes, salvias, fuchsias, &c., for planting out in beds, should now be made, and the pots in which they are inserted plunged in a hot-bed. Cuttings inserted thickly in pots or pans, as directed in September, should now be planted in small pots, one in each; the pots placed in moderate warmth.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Seedlings, which are being lined out, in the event of the weather being dry, should have their roots dipped in a puddle made of cow-dung, earth, and water. This is a precaution which, under the circumstance named, should never be omitted.

Head-down young Trees.—It frequently happens that in the present injudicious methods of conducting the operations of planting, young trees appear stunted; either they have been drawn in the nursery, were too long exposed to the weather before planting, or, what is most likely, were planted in wet or otherwise unprepared land. Under such circumstances they often die or merely exist; and the best way to stimulate the oak, ash, Spanish chestnut, elm, and sycamore, is to head them down, after they have been two or more years planted, to within an inch of the ground. Should they throw up more shoots than one, the best should be preserved, and the others cut away at their origin. Where the trees have been judiciously selected, the ground properly prepared, and the work of planting skilfully executed, the operation of heading will not be required; and the trees, instead of remaining in a dormant state, will grow on from the first.

Loosen the ground between young trees and thorn quicks which have been one or more years lined out. For this purpose a three-pronged fork, or the Spanish or swan-neck hoe, is much to be preferred to the spade.

Sow Furze on the summit of ditch banks, as a shelter to young plantations, or for fences in situations where the thorn will not thrive. By clipping these fences in spring, an excellent description of food is provided for horses and cows, and the fences are thereby rendered permanent. Three tiers of furze planted in the face of a ditch, in the place of thorns, with a row sown on the summit, form an excellent fence, and yield a quantity of green food for horses.

Seeds of all kinds are liable to be destroyed by mice after being sown; they must therefore be carefully watched, and traps set, if necessary.

The lining-out seedling Forest-trees, if not performed in November, should not be any longer delayed. They may succeed well if lined out any time before the 1st of May, should the weather at the time be mild and moist; but as the chances are, that after this month the roots will become dry before they are planted, the better way is to have the work completed as soon as possible.—See November.

Orchid Plantations, if not formed, as directed in November, may still be made. Every farmer should have a plot of this useful plant; even the back of his ditches, or the face of any dike which must necessarily remain open, may be turned to profitable account; and although we trust the time is not distant when liquid manure will be duly cared for, yet should it so happen that a stream of it is running to waste (which near towns and villages it often is), every effort should be made to convert it to the purposes of irrigation of grass land or of a sally garden.

The thinning of Plantations and the felling of timber may still be proceeded with.

APRIL.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

Vines.—Syringe frequently, attend to thinning, tie up young wood, stop laterals, disbud and thin, and if the red spider appear, syringe with water in which sulphur has been mixed.

Peach-house.—Fly the syringe here also, and if the crop have set too abundantly, thin out the fruit so as to prevent the trees being injured by over-bearing.

Melons and Cucumbers.—Give plenty of air, and if the beds be heated by dung, renew the linings whenever the heat appears to decline; do not allow the branches to become crowded; water regularly.

Strawberries.—Water abundantly in dry weather.

Insects.—Peach, nectarine, and apricot trees on the walls must be watched; and as soon as the fruit is set, should green fly or mildew threaten, mix plenty of sulphur with the water, and syringe frequently, thin the fruit freely, that which is left will be finer, and the trees will continue longer in health.

Sow successional crops of peas, beans, turnips, radishes, lettuce, &c., both at the beginning and end of the month. Cucumber, vegetable marrow, and gourd seed should be sown for ridging out.

Transplant from the seed-bed into rich ground, onions sown in autumn; also cabbage, cauliflower, savoy, and celery plants. In doing so, it is quite unnecessary, or rather it is found to be injurious to celery, to shorten the roots and cut off the tops according to the old plan. Plant out successional crops of cabbage and cauliflowers. Sow pickling cucumbers for planting out next month.

Gooseberry and Currant Bushes.—All superfluous shoots should be rubbed off, and those allowed to remain should be stopped; this checks luxuriant growth, admits light and air, and prevents exhaustion of the land.

Fruit Trees, whether trained or standard, should be divested of all superfluous growths as they appear; judicious finger pruning at this season will obviate severer pruning hereafter, with its injurious consequences.

FLOWER GARDEN.

The Auricula.—This queen of florists' flowers will now be coming into bloom, and should be removed to the blow-house or to some sheltered situation, and shaded from the mid-day sun.

To grow the auricula in perfection demands incessant care, and is indeed accomplished but by few. It requires pure air and fresh soil, such as that from the surface of an old pasture field, including the sod, which should be laid in a heap for a year or more, that the vegetable matter which it contains may be decomposed before being used; this should be enriched by nearly half its quantity, of the dark mould which results from rotted cow or hot-bed manure, and to this, especially if the loam be at all clayey, some fine clean bank or river sand is added. A little leaf-mould (earth of rotted tree leaves), and even of rotted stumps of trees, are often added to the compost, and also a small quantity, say half a stone weight to a wheelbarrow of compost, of fine bone-dust. With such a compost (which should be protected from rain, and in a situation where there is pure air), a due degree of care will insure fine auriculas.

Pansies, Pinks, and Ranunculuses.—Stir the surface of their beds and water with liquid manure, such as, water in which sheep-droppings have been macerated, and this may be made richer by adding a pound of guano to ten gallons of the liquid. A top-dressing of compost, consisting of cow-dung and leaf-earth rotted to a black earth and mixed with loam, would be of great use at this time.

The Polyanthus.—This beautiful and easily-cultivated flower will now be coming into bloom; and if grown in the open border and intended for exhibition, the plants may be raised with large balls and potted; this will not in the least interfere with the blooming, and when out of flower they may again be returned to the border. Like the auricula it requires pure air, a fresh soil, and a situation where it will be protected from the meridian summer's sun. It is for the most part cultivated in pots, but the best we have ever seen were grown in an open border. A strong, rich, and rather retentive loam seems better suited to it than light rich earth.

Seedling Florists' Flowers.—Plants raised from seeds sown in February will now be sufficiently large for being potted off—a number into each large pot, or one into a small one; use rich light compost, and let there be plenty of drainage.

Annuals to succeed those sown last month, may be sown towards the middle of the present.

Cuttings.—This is a good season for making cuttings of pelargoniums, salvias, fuchsias, verbenas, African groundsel, also for taking off rooted suckers of pansies, calceolarias, cinerarias, &c., for the open borders.

Greenhouse plants will now require a plentiful supply of water, and all the air that can be given.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Nursery.—This is the best season in the year, if the weather be mild and moist, for lining out evergreens of all kinds, such as seedling fir, seedling evergreen shrubs, rooted cuttings of evergreens, &c. The soil should in all cases be well broken; a mixture of loam and moor, when a choice is presented, should be preferred.

The Seeds of birch, alder, horn-beam, beech, larch, Scotch fir, spruce fir, and others of the pine tribe should be sown towards the end of the month. The ground may be loam, or loam with a mixture of moor perfectly free from weeds, and prepared by a previous green crop. Being well digged and broken fine, lay off the beds four feet wide, with alleys fifteen inches wide between them; rake smoothly and sow the seeds so thick, as nearly to cover the surface, over which riddle a compost, composed of equal parts of fresh light loam and bog-mould, and immediately net the beds to keep off birds.

Weeds will now begin to require attention; they should never be permitted to attain strength, after which they will be difficult to extirpate.

Plant Evergreens.—Scotch fir and spruce, indeed any of the pine tribe, may be planted in this month with safety. Some experienced planters prefer this season for planting mountain and moor land with pines. We have done so, and generally with success; but if a dry summer follows, the chances are against this, and in favour of autumn planting, which we therefore greatly prefer.

Evergreen Shrubs may now be planted with success, if the weather be moist and cloudy; but for this work, also, we greatly prefer the open weather of winter.

MAY.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

Vines.—Water by means of the syringe or engine; steady warmth and attention to stopping the laterals and thinning will still be necessary. The borders may be occasionally drenched with liquid manure. After the fruit begins to change colour, more air should be given, yet the heat should be kept up to about 90° by day, but may be allowed to fall to 60° at night.

Peach-house.—The fruit being now stoned and thinned if too abundant, the trees must be syringed freely, all fore-right shoots rubbed off and luxuriant ones stopped, and a steady heat maintained, not allowing the thermometer to indicate a less heat by day than 70°, nor less than 50° by night. After the fruit begins to change colour, the syringing must cease, and abundance of air be admitted.

Melons.—Ridge out plants in the pits in which early potatoes have been raised; stop the branches of fruiting plants as soon as they have extended to the frames; keep the branches thin; maintain a good bottom heat, never less than 75°; and admit air in fine weather.

Pickling Cucumbers.—Ridge out on a slight hot-bed.

Fruit Trees on the open walls will, on close examination, probably be found to be attacked by green fly or other insects, or by mildew, in which case they must be well washed with lime water, or with pure water mixed with sulphur, applied with a garden engine; should this not prove effectual, diluted tobacco water must be used.

Summer Pruning.—All foreright shoots, and indeed all such shoots as it is probable would require to be cut out altogether in the winter pruning, should now be rubbed off, and over-luxuriant shoots shortened. Allowing trees to grow rampant during the summer, is one great cause of unfruitfulness, and for this reason: it is well known that the roots of trees extend in proportion to the number of leaves which the trees bear, so that a tree which has been permitted to produce a large quantity of foreright and other useless shoots, will thereby have formed a system of roots, which, next season, will push forth with increased luxuriance, tending to the formation of wood, but not of fruit. This may be guarded against, and the tree maintained in any required degree of growth and fruitfulness (other things being favourable), by attention to the too much neglected operation of early summer pruning, disbudbing, and thinning.

Gooseberry Bushes should be treated in the same way; that is, the head should be kept thin by rubbing out the superfluous young wood, and shortening all other shoots.

Raspberry Bushes should also be gone over, the best shoots selected, and all others cut away. By this means a greater produce in fruit will be returned from a given quantity of manure, for if these be no useless shoots or branches, there will be no useless roots.

The Gooseberry Catpillar will probably ere now have commenced its attack; the best remedy is, to pick off the grubs with the hand; but as a preventive, as soon as this is observed, or that the eggs have been laid on the under sides of the leaves, let the bushes be well washed with lime-water, and whilst they are wet, dusted with fine road dust. This simple recipe we have found efficacious, and the dust is washed off by the rain long before the fruit is ripe.

Sow peas, beans, spinach, lettuce, stone turnip, onion or oftener in the month, according to the demand; also, kidney beans, scarlet runners, and silver-skinned onions for pickling.

Sow early purple Cape and Grange's early cauliflower brocoli the second week in May and the first week in June. The produce will be fit for table during October and until the middle of December. Sow green close-headed the first week in May; the heads will be ready in November and until January ends. Sow dwarf-brown second week in May, it will be in production from February to end of April. Sow sulphur-coloured and spring white the second week in May, their heads will be ready during the April and May following.

Plant out brocoli, cabbage, cauliflowers, savoys, Brussels sprouts, &c., for autumn and winter use.

Celery, from seed sown in February and transplanted in April on a rich border, will now be fit for final planting. Celery grown in well-enriched moorland, is far more delicious than that from a rank old garden. The usual mode of planting is, to form trenches ten or twelve inches deep; half fill these with rotten hot-bed dung and dig it, bringing up some of the subsoil to mix with and cover the manure. Excellent crops are raised in this way; but a better plan is, to mix the manure with fresh good surface soil; the bottom of the trench not being loosened, does not absorb the water, which must be regularly given to this semi-aquatic plant; and the young fibres have from the commencement a sweeter and more congenial pasture; preparation being thus made, the plants are to be raised with a trowel, retaining a ball of the rich earth in which they were growing, and planted at six inches one from another; give them a good watering two or three times a week in dry weather, one of these times with manure water.

Rhubarb and Sea-kale.—Prevent the weakening of the stocks by cutting off the incipient flowers.

Asparagus Plantations, if not already made, should be finished as early in the month as possible: the ground should be dry and well enriched, and plant three rows in a bed five feet wide, sixteen inches between the plants.

Artichokes.—Thin the stools, and manure the surface of the ground between them highly.

FLOWER GARDEN.

Dahlias may be planted out about the middle of the month, or as soon as frost is no longer to be apprehended. In order to encourage an immediate growth, some good compost of leaf-mould, rotted dung, fresh earth, and sand, should be given to each plant. The best way of planting is in a plot, in lines four feet apart, and three feet plant from plant in the lines, with a sanded alley two feet wide between the lines.

Salvias, petunias, calceolarias, cinerarias, anagallis, verbenas, fuchsias, &c., may be bedded out as soon as injury from frost is no longer to be feared.

Heaths, epacris, azalias, and other woody plants disposed to a straggling or rampant mode of growth, may be rendered compact by pinching off the extremity of the growing shoots.

Pansies are best propagated by taking off side slips, which may be covered with a cap-glass. Flowering plants should be shaded in the middle of the day, and the ground between them should be kept moist.

Hardy Annuals. sown in March or April, will require thinning, and others may now be sown to succeed them. The thinnings being planted in moist weather, or in dry weather if shaded and regularly watered, will take root and flower later than those not transplanted.

Biennials and Perennials, such as hollyhock, penstemons, phloxes, &c., raised from seed sown in the open ground in the beginning of last month, will, towards the end of this, be fit for transplanting into nursing beds.

Chrysanthemums.—Stuckers may now be planted in a rich border, to be raised with balls and potted in August.

Violets.—If the weather be moist, beds of the single or double variety of this sweet flower may be made.

Auriculas and Polyanthus. now out of flower, must be taken from the blow-house and placed in a situation where they will receive only the morning sun, such as a north border, where the pots may be plunged in coal-ashes. As the seed ripens let it be gathered and put in a dry place.

Carnations.—Picotees and pinks must be watered in dry weather, once a week, with manure water; tie them as they advance; brush off or otherwise destroy green fly should it appear. Seed of pinks and carnations may now be sown in the open ground.

Tulips should be shaded, and protected from heavy showers and cutting winds.

Greenhouse Plants, or those in frames, which are intended to be planted in the flower ground, should have all the air possible for some time previously; they may be planted out towards the end of the month. Neatness in the flower garden, and taste in the arrangement of his plants, will now distinguish the gardener from the mere handy labourer. Any spare plants, especially misembryanthemums, may be planted in rockwork or other sunny situations.

Annuals will now be advancing to blossom. Let such as are weak or straggling be neatly supported; but avoid the sheaf-like manner of binding practised by persons who should never be admitted inside a flower garden; neither suffer annuals to grow too close. If not permitted to bear seed, annuals will continue to flower the whole summer.

Seedling Florists' Flowers, such as carnations, pinks, auriculas, polyanthus, dahlias, Chinese primroses, cinerarias, &c., sown as directed in spring, will now require to be potted singly in small pots, in a compost of fresh earth, leaf-mould, and sand; let them be then placed in a cold frame and kept close for two or three days, after which they must have plenty of air and water. Slips of auriculas and polyanthus taken off in spring, and planted in pots or under a hand-glass, will require similar treatment.

Insects.—Should the weather prove dry and warm, rose bushes, pinks, carnations, dahlias, indeed every kind of plant is liable to be infested with green fly; such as can be covered by a cap-glass or a sheet may be fumigated with tobacco; but syringing with tobacco-water is perhaps the best remedy.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Nursery.—If the seeds directed to be sown in the end of last month were not sown, no time should now be lost. The principal works in this department during the present month are weeding, watering seedlings should the weather be very dry, and cropping ground with root crops, such as turnips or potatoes, which was trenched last autumn, and which will be required either for seeds or young trees the ensuing season.

Thin Oak Coppice.—When the thinnings are of a size sufficiently large for stripping, this is the proper season for this work; if they are too small it had better be done in the winter. If the object of cutting down a coppice periodically be the bark, as many of the strongest shoots must be left on each stool as it is considered able to bear. In favourable circumstances as to soil and situation, the stools being eight feet apart, five or six principals may be allowed to stand on each stool.

Save Bark.—As soon as it is found that the bark will separate easily from the wood, the business of felling oak timber may commence. It is admitted that oak or any other kind of timber felled in summer, when the pores are filled with fluid sap, is thereby much deteriorated, yet, in order to save the bark of oak, often equal in value to the timber, it is necessary to cut it at this season. There are peeling irons made expressly for stripping off the bark, which is then to be carried to an open part of the wood or to a field outside it, and horsed; that is, placed in a leaning position, bark outwards, against a pole supported horizontally on forked sticks about eighteen inches above the surface. The pieces of bark are to be placed so as to admit of a free circulation of air amongst them; and except the weather be damp or wet it will require no further care until perfectly dry, which may be known by a piece snapping in two when bent. Some, in order to avoid any injury which might arise from having the ends of bark resting on the ground whilst drying, erect a species of long narrow hurdle, on which they build the bark loosely, by which means it is not much affected by any kind of weather.

Crop Land for future Planting.—Low land intended to be planted in autumn, and which was trenched in November, may now be highly manured, and planted with drill potatoes, turnips, &c.

JUNE.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

The Vine.—The ordinary routine of stopping laterals, tying up advancing shoots, and thinning in late houses, must still be attended to.

Peach-house.—Continue the use of the syringe until the fruit begins to change colour, after which give plenty of air, and remove all shoots not required for filling vacancies. Should green fly appear, fumigate. Constant syringing will keep down the red spider.

Melons and Cucumbers.—Keep up a good bottom heat and supply moisture regularly; watch closely for aphides, and if they appear fumigate.

Wall and Espalier Trees.—Remove all shoots not required to fill vacancies, and stop such as appear disposed to luxuriant growth; this will cause the formation of fruit-buds, whereas, if the shoots are allowed to grow on, and are cut back, which is the old practice, luxuriant shoots, and not fruit, will be the result. Thin the crops where too abundant, and ply the garden engine if green fly, red spider, or other insects appear.

Strawberries.—Water plentifully if the weather be dry, and spread short grass (lawn mowing) on the surface of the ground, both to retain moisture and to keep the fruit clean.

Sow successional crops of peas, beans, kidney beans, spinach, turnips, lettuce, and radish; sow a little early York and Vanac cabbage for autumn use; also Knight's protecting broccoli.

Plant out celery, cabbage, borecole, savoy, brocoli, Brussels sprouts and cauliflowers in well-manured land; liquid manure applied to such crops in damp weather will greatly promote their growth.

Transplant Leeks into rich, well-prepared ground; they may be planted in lines a foot apart across beds, and about four inches one from another in the lines.

Pickling Cucumbers should now be ridged out in a sunny and sheltered spot on rich ground. Some mushroom spawna may be inserted a little below the surface of these beds.

Thin growing Crops, and, by means of the fork and hoe, keep the ground loose between them, and attend to the weeding.

Raspberries.—Thin out the young shoots, leaving from three to eight of the strongest, according to the vigour of the stool.

Asparagus.—This being a sea-side plant, it is recommended to water it with a solution of salt in water; to drench it with liquid manure, we know from experience to be an excellent practice.

Grafts.—Remove the clay; see that the bandage is not cutting the scion, and tie the advancing shoots to stakes, to prevent their being broken by the wind.

FLOWER GARDEN.

Dahlias.—Prune away such shoots as appear to cross or crowd each other, and tie those that remain to stakes as they advance. Some rotted manure should be laid on the surface of the ground, and an occasional watering with liquid manure water will be of use at this time. Earwigs, which often commit great ravages on this flower, may be trapped in small flower-pots half filled with moss, and turned down on the top of the stakes.

The Pink.—This beautiful and most easily cultivated flower will now be coming into bloom, and should be shaded from the meridian sun. Give water if the weather be dry, and liquid manure if the ground be not sufficiently rich. This is the proper time to make pipings. Plant them close together in light sandy soil, and cover with a cap-glass. Slips, if taken off now will strike very freely. Pinks may also be propagated with great certainty by layering.

Carnations.—Tie up the advancing flower stems, and cut off all the flower-buds except a few of the plumpest. Give occasional and plentiful waterings in dry weather; and should green fly appear, let them be gently brushed off.

Cinerarias.—In the present month, or indeed at any time during the summer or autumn after the plants have blossomed, unless it be intended to save seed from them, cut down the flowering stems, and place the pots in a frame, or in a shaded place out of doors, where they must be regularly supplied with water. In August turn them out of the pots, slip off the rooted suckers, and pot them in rich light loam; water them well, and place them in a frame, which should be kept close and shaded for a few days; afterwards give air freely, and shift the plants, when they require it, into larger pots. So treated they will flower strongly throughout the winter. New varieties are obtained from seed sown in February in seed-pans of light sandy mould, placed in the greenhouse, and not allowed to become dry.

Auriculas and Polyanthus. also double primroses and violets, may now be increased by separating the offsets, and planting in a shaded border in rich earth.

Tulips, hyacinths, ranunculuses, and anemones must be raised as soon as their leaves have turned yellow. Choose fine weather, and when the roots are dry, put them past in drawers or paper bags, in a dry place.

Exotics.—Plant out pelargoniums, verbenas, calceolarias, fuchsias, salvias, cinerarias, &c., in flower-beds and baskets, for the summer; let the tallest plants stand towards the centre of the largest beds, and the smallest near the margin of the smallest. Pay particular attention to the colours of the flowers and time of flowering of the plants, otherwise the parterre will have a bizarre appearance, and be far less interesting than where taste has been exercised in the arrangement.

Greenhouse plants may now be placed out in their summer quarters. See that a floor of coal ashes is made for the pots to stand on through which worms cannot pass, and replenish the greenhouse with balsams, and the tender showy annuals prepared for the purpose.

Cuttings of Heaths, Eparsis, and other hard-wood Plants may now be made. Take about an inch of the present year's growth, divest the lower half of leaves by cutting them off with a scissor, plant them in fine clean white sand, cover with a bell-glass, and place the pots in a shaded part of the greenhouse or cold frame.

Cuttings of most other plants may also be made at this time. In general, it is only necessary to plant them in a mixture of leaf-mould and sand, and place the pots in a close frame, where they may be shaded. Cuttings of hardy plants, such as penstemons, antirrhinums, pansies, wall-flowers, &c., will strike freely in a shaded border. Rhododendrons, oranges, camellias, azalias, and the like may now be grafted.

Annals.—Towards the end of the month sow hardy and half-hardy annuals, such as nemophylla, schizanthus, Clarkia, Collinsia, mignonette, &c., in flower-pots, to bloom throughout the winter in the greenhouse or drawing-room; sow them also in the open ground for flowering in autumn. Sow Brompton and queen-stock for flowering in winter. Pot off Chinese primroses, cinerarias, pelargoniums, verbenas, &c., raised from seed sown in spring.

Moss Grass Lawns once a fortnight, and if worm-casts appear give plentiful watering with lime-water, or with water in which corrosive sublimate has been mixed, an ounce to ten gallons. Fly the scuffle and rake wherever weeds appear. Stake advancing hollyhocks, dahlias, phloxes, and other tall-growing plants. Peg down verbenas, and like straggling plants.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Nursery.—The seedling forest trees which were sown towards the beginning of last month will now have arisen; and in doing so, many of them, especially the fir, by protruding the seed above the surface, cause little holes to form in it, into which the air and heat enter, to the injury of the tender rootlets. To prevent this, some fine compost or bog-mould should be sifted over the bed, to the depth of about a quarter of an inch.

Elm-seeds will be ripe some time in this month; they may be gathered and sown immediately, in the way directed for sowing birch, alder, &c., in April.

Weeding is almost the only business requiring attention at this season, but it must not by any means be neglected. The hoeing amongst recently lined-out trees not only destroys weeds, but, by forming a coat of loose earth on the surface of the ground, prevents the escape of moisture from below, and thus the cracks which, in clay land especially, are apt to be formed in hot weather, are prevented.

Make Preparation for future Planting.—Should other avocations permit, this is, perhaps, the best season in the year for extirpating the furze, heath, &c., on waste land intended for planting. It should be set on fire, and the roots afterwards torn up with the furze adze.

Fences, where they consist of stone, may also be formed.

Drain moorland intended for planting. The drains may be open, and of such depth and distance one from another, as will prevent water resting nearer than three feet to the surface.

JULY.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

Vine and Peach trees will require the same attention hitherto recommended, to keep them from green fly, red spider, and mildew. When the crop has been gathered, give all the air possible in order to ripen the wood.

Walls and espaliers.—Nail or tie in such as will be required to furnish the trees, and shorten such as will have to be cut back or spurred: this will check the tendency to luxuriance of growth.

Melons and Cucumbers.—Shoots taken off during this or the last month, at the second or third joint below the extremity of healthful branches, planted in pots of rich loose earth, and plunged in a close warm frame, strike immediately; and in three weeks will be ready for planting out into newly-made hot-beds, where they will continue to bear more abundantly than if raised from seed. Do not let the heat of the beds fall below 60°.

Strawberries.—Pot some of the most forward runners in fresh rich earth for forcing; cut off the runners from bearing plants, and prick out plants in rich shady ground for forming new plantations.

Bud fruit-trees as soon as the bark will separate freely, choosing, if possible, moist shady weather.

Sow Welsh onions, also successional crops of peas, beans, turnips, spinach, lettuce, kidney-beans; also York and Vanac cabbage for use in winter and spring, and a little Cape broccoli for use in April.

Plant out cabbages, celery, brocoli, savoya, borecole, Brussels sprouts, leeks, and cauliflowers; and water with liquid manure.

Carrots.—Sow early horn carrots in a rich dry border for drawing young.

Potatoes should be gathered before they blossom, and dried for winter use.

Liquid Manure.—Fruit-tree borders and vegetables may with great advantage be drenched occasionally with liquid manure; and the ground should be kept so loose by forking, that liquid manure or rain may easily reach the roots. A mulching of rotten manure on the surface of the ground, around fruit-trees, is of great use at this season.

Weeding.—Never let a weed blossom; it is the sure indication of idleness or neglect.

FLOWER GARDEN.

The Carnation.—The layering of this most splendid of florists' flowers, should be commenced as soon as the flowers have shown that no degeneracy has taken place, and this will generally be towards the middle of the present month. It is performed by removing some of the lower leaves of the side shoots with a scissore, then enter a sharp penknife immediately below a knot or joint, going half through the stem, and cutting upwards for about half an inch; bend down and fasten the layer in some good compost, and the work being carefully executed, not one in 100 will fail. Some florists, however, consider that pipings formed and treated as pink pipings make better plants.

Bud Roses.—The Ayrshire, rugæ, garland, crimson boursalt, Princess Louise, Donna Maria, Laura Dayoust, and others of the evergreen roses, form beautiful drooping standards if budded on lofty stocks.

Daklias must be staked as they advance, and receive plenty of water in dry weather. Liquid manure may be given with advantage if the ground be not sufficiently rich; it should not be allowed to come in immediate contact with the stem. Cuttings taken off now, planted in pots and put into a close frame, will strike and form good plants for next year.

Chrysanthemums.—The tops of the shoots, three or four inches in length, taken off now, potted in small pots, and placed in a close frame or shaded border, will root at once; and being shifted next month into good-sized pots of rich compost, will form robust handsome plants. Or if the shoots are pegged to the ground, the tops will, in a few days, incline upwards, and may in that state be conveniently layered in small pots.

Cuttings of geraniums, verbenas, salvias, and all kinds of plants required for planting out in flower beds next summer, may now be struck either under hand-glasses in a shady border of light earth, or in pots which may be placed in a frame and shaded.

Roses may now be budded, and the young shoots of moss, Provence, &c., layered.

Seed.—Save seed of auriculas, polyanthus, pinks, pansies, &c., as they ripen, and put it up carefully in a dry place.

Seedlings of florists' flowers, &c., sown in spring, may now be pricked out in small pots.

Pelargoniums should be headed down as soon as out of flower, unless required to ripen seed.

Pansies.—Rooted slips planted now will flower in autumn. Pansies are liable to die off in dry warm weather; the beds should therefore lie in a somewhat shaded place, and the stock kept up by planting out the offsets as soon as they are rooted.

Fuscia.—Trap earwigs in small flower-pots with moss, and worms in flower-pots may be destroyed by watering with lime-water. Green fly on auriculas, polyanthus, and other choice plants should be brushed off with a camel's hair pencil dipped in well-diluted tobacco water. Rose bushes and the like may be cleared of these pests by syringing with the same liquid.

Mignonette and other annuals sown in the beginning of this month will flower in autumn; and those sown in spring may have the flowering season prolonged by removing the blossoms, and not allowing them to produce seed.

Replace faded flowers.—Many annuals will have flowered, and begin to look unsightly; let them be at once removed, and their places supplied with scarlet geraniums, verbenas, heliotropes, petunias and the like, of which a store has been kept in reserve; in this way the beauty of the flower-garden may be maintained unimpaired until late in the autumn.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Give unremitting attention to keeping down weeds. Continue also the saving of oak bark, and the freeing of young plantations from furze, briars, and underwood.

Pruning.—Young plantations should be carefully examined at this season, and all over-luxuriant irregular shoots, and such as are about to contend with the leader for supremacy, be removed, or their terminal bud or a little of their extremity shortened, by which their growth will be effectually kept within bounds. This will appear to some, perhaps, as too great minuteness in a matter where they only considered it necessary to plant the young trees and then leave them to their fate; but experience has demonstrated that this is not sufficient. When it is considered that an active person can examine and treat, as here recommended, an immense number of young trees in a single day; and that any branch which neglect of this care permits to grow until it requires to be sawn off, has been robbing the ground of food which should have gone to the formation of valuable timber, and, moreover, that every saw-cut impairs the timber more or less,—and if the branch happen to be large, to an extent which may endanger the life of the tree,—we think the objection to the close attention we have recommended ought not to have much weight.

Ground may also be prepared for planting in the autumn, by draining that which is wet, burning furze, heath, &c., on waste land, and afterwards tearing up the roots; also, for trenching land for planting or for a nursery; and for fencing, where the fences are to be altogether of stone, or of banks of earth faced with stone.

Grass in young plantations should be removed from about the young trees. It may be cut by a careful person with a reaping-hook. If allowed to overtop the plants, it will injure them very seriously.

AUGUST.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

Vines.—As the fruit approaches maturity, watering must cease, and plenty of air be admitted. Stop laterals, and tie in young wood.

Peach-house.—Here, also, much air should be admitted, otherwise the fruit will be ill-flavoured. Continue to remove superfluous growths, so as to admit light to the young wood and fruit.

Wall-trees.—Continue to lay in the young wood; should mildew or blistered leaves appear, dust with sulphur when the leaves are moist.

Melons.—Stop and thin the shoots; guard against the decline of bottom heat; if the thermometer plunged in the pit indicate less than 60°, the heat should be renewed by linings, &c. Wash the walls with lime mixed with sulphur, to keep off red spider.

Cabbage Seeds should be sown; the large York Imperial, Wellington, and flat Dutch, are the most profitable kinds.

Cauliflower Seed may be sown about the twentieth of the month.

Onions for transplanting in spring should be sown on a rich well-prepared piece of ground; the Portugal is the best for this purpose. Sow Welch onions for winter use, and save the principal crop as soon as ready.

Strawberries.—Remove runners from established plants, and make a new plantation if required.

Plant cabbage and borecole for use in spring.

Spinach.—Sow the main crop of prickly on a rich well-prepared piece of ground, in drills fifteen inches apart, and thin the plants so as to stand six or eight inches apart.

Turnips.—A principal crop of the stone should now be sown, either broadcast or in drills, one foot apart. Some ashes procured by burning weeds, &c., spread over the surface, and raked in with the seed, will render the turnips mellow.

Lettuce.—Sow brown Dutch, hardy green, and Hammer-smith cabbage lettuce, and transplant, as soon as the plants are sufficiently large, into a dry warm border for standing over winter.

Salading, such as radishes, mustard, and cress, may be sown in a south border, or rather, under a south wall.

Onion bed sowing.—Manure and dig ground as it becomes vacant; dig or fork between growing crops, and water with liquid manure.

FLOWER GARDEN.

The Pelargonium.—Early in the present month the pelargoniums which are out of bloom should be cut down to within an inch or so of the origin of the branches, of which cuttings may be made, which will strike freely in light soil in pots, in a frame, or even in an open border. The pots containing the plants which were headed down may then be placed in the greenhouse or in the open air, and as soon as they have made shoots an inch or so in length, turn them out of their pots, shake off the earth, cut off the stronger roots, and re-pot in smaller pots of light and not rich earth. The plants may be placed in a frame, which should be kept close and shaded for some days. Air should afterwards be given and increased gradually, and as soon as the plants appear to be growing, they should be wholly uncovered.

Carnations and Pinks will now be in flower. If intended for exhibition, or to produce fine large flowers, only one strong stem should be allowed to rise from each plant; from this stem all the pods, except from two to four or five, according to the vigour of the plant, should be pruned away whilst they are young. The calix, or pod of the opening flower, should be tied with a bit of worsted; a card, for the purpose of arranging the petals as they expand, should be fixed on it; and the flower protected by pasteboard or oiled paper caps, from the rain and sun. The beauty of the flowers so protected, and the length of time they continue in bloom, will amply compensate for this additional trouble. Early-formed layers will be rooted towards the end of the month, after which the sooner they are taken off and potted the better. Remove the decaying petals from such pods as appear to be producing seed.

Pinks.—The rooted pipings should now be planted out in beds of light rich loam for flowering next year.

Pansies.—Cuttings struck this or last month, and planted out into beds next month, are principally to be relied on for the spring bloom.

Napoleonic and tree-violets should now be raised and potted in good earth.

Dahlias must be kept tied to the stakes as they advance in growth; spread some well-rotted manure on the surface, and water occasionally with liquid manure.

Cuttings of geraniums, calceolarias, verbenas, fuchsias, petunias, African groundsel, &c., for planting out beds in next summer, should now be made. A large number of such cuttings may be planted in flower-pots eight inches in diameter. The pot should be half filled with drainage (gravel), and the soil should be composed of leaf-mould, maiden-earth, and sand in equal parts.

Pansies.—Take off rooted side-roots, which plant in beds of rich loam for flowering in spring.

Mignonette now sown in flower-pots in the open air, and removed to a frame or greenhouse, on the approach of frost, will blossom early in spring. Seeds of Chinese primroses, cinerarias, calceolarias, geraniums, &c., sown now will blossom next summer.

Hyacinths, Tulips, &c., for early forcing, should now be planted in pots of rich loam.

Chrysanthemums, planted in the border in May, should be raised and planted in good-sized pots of very rich earth, put into a shady place and well supplied with water. The tops being cut off, planted in small pots of rich earth and put into a close frame, will strike root in a few days; and by attending to them with water, and occasionally manure water, they will form fine dwarf plants, and will flower well.

Chinese and other evergreen Roses may now be propagated by cuttings, inserted in a mixture of sand and leaf-mould in a border shaded from the mid-day sun.

Chinese Primroses should be shifted into large pots of rich earth and the blossoms nipped off, so as to cause them to flower in winter.

Polyanthuses may now be parted, and potted or planted in the open ground.

Annals.—Save seeds of all kinds of annuals and other flower plants as they ripen.

Liquid Manure.—The draining from a midden, or from the cow-house, or guano mixed with water at the rate of about half an ounce to a quart, has been applied to florists' flowers, more especially to the dahlia, pansy, pink, carnation, pelargonium, &c., with the best effect. The liquid manure should not be fresh, but the guano water may be given as soon as mixed. Choose moist weather for applying it, and do not give it more than once, or at most twice a week; use it cautiously at first and increase the quantity of the application by degrees.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Attention to weeding, and to watering if the weather proves dry, constitutes the business in the nursery for the present month. The preparations as formerly suggested to be made for future planting, whether by draining, trenching, fencing, &c., may of course be proceeded with.

The sowing of Bark will now conclude, as the bark will no longer strip. The stacks, if intended to stand the winter, must be thatched so effectually as to exclude rain.

Thinning and the kind of pruning recommended last month may be continued; also the freeing of plantations from underwood of all kinds, which may be preventing the free circulation of air.

SEPTEMBER.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

Vines and Peach-house.—Abundance of air must now be admitted to ripen the wood; this will, however, be assisted by shutting up early in the evening, so as to retain warmth during the night. If the red spider or fly appeared when the fruit was ripening, as soon as it is gathered wash the trees well with water, with which sulphur has been mixed.

Fruit should be gathered as it ripens, choosing dry weather; the best way of storing is on clean, fresh, neatly-drawn straw, on shelves, in a well-ventilated room; the fruit should be allowed to stand clear of each other.

Cabbage plants which were sown last month, or in July, should be pricked out on a piece of good dry ground.

Cauliflower plants should in like manner be transplanted into a frame, or under the shelter of a fence, where they may be protected by mats, &c., during hard frost. Transplant lettuces from the seed-bed on a dry border to stand the winter.

Strawberry Plantations, if required, may still be made.

If well-rooted plants from runners of the present year were taken off in June or July, and transplanted in a rich shady border, they may now be raised with balls, and planted in a piece of deeply-dug and well-manured ground, in an open situation, in lines twenty inches apart, and in clumps of three in a clump, with intervals of eighteen inches between the clumps. The following are fine kinds: British Queen, Deptford Pine, Eliza, Prince Albert, Princess Alice Maude, Princess Royal, and Elton Pine.

Raspberries.—Cut away the old wood, and thin the young, if this have not been already done, leaving from three to six or eight, according to the strength of the stool; tie them up and fork in a good dressing of manure.

Onions, if not raised and saved last month, should now be attended to.

Make Mushroom Beds either on shelves in a house, which can be heated by a fire or other contrivance, or with well-fermented stable manure, in sheds or in the open air. Boxes, such as those used for mignonette, but larger, may be filled with partially-dried horse-droppings, firmly packed; some bits of spawn are then to be placed on the surface, and covered with a couple of inches of earth from a pasture; placed on the flue of a hot-house or in any other warm place, covered with hay, and occasionally watered with tepid water, they will produce a great quantity of mushrooms. To form beds to stand in the open air, put together a good body of well-fermented and two or three times turned stable manure, and tree leaves; beat them down firmly in making, and after the heat has in a good measure subsided, spawn the bed, which may be of any shape—a broad cone is perhaps the best—put in pieces of artificial or natural spawn six inches apart, and earth all over to the depth of two inches, with fresh earth from a pasture; water with warm water, and cover up closely with hay, taking care, however, that the heat be not strong, otherwise the spawn will be destroyed. As the weather becomes cold, the covering of hay and the exterior coat of straw must be increased. Melon and cucumber beds spawned in August, and covered up with hay, as soon as the melons or cucumber plants are thrown out, will also produce abundantly.

Celery.—Let this be landed in dry weather; if turf-mould can be had, it will answer much better than earth.

Buds.—Untie the bandages of.

FLOWER GARDEN.

Pansy.—Although this, like the pink and polyanthus, is peculiarly the cottager's flower, it has obtained, and well deserves, a place in the most elegant parterres. Its cultivation is most simple, the whole art consisting in providing a very rich soil, and in keeping the plants young by slipping off the young rooted side shoots, planting them in nursing lines in a rich shaded border, and removing them with balls to a situation somewhat shaded, in which to blossom. This may be done at any time during the summer, but the principal plantation should be made in the present month, for flowering in the early part of the following summer. To raise fine kinds, the seed should be sown only from the large circular flowers, which should be fertilized with such colours as are most desired, and every narrow-petalled and inferior flower should be destroyed.

Calceolarias.—Rooted slips taken off now and potted in small pots, and re-potted into good-sized ones in February, will form fine flowering plants the following summer; the plants should be kept rather dry in winter. New varieties are raised from seed which should be sown in light sandy soil in February; the pots or seed-pans should stand near the glass.

Geraniums and other exotics, which were planted in the open ground, and which it is desired to preserve, should be raised and potted in the beginning of the month, so that new roots be formed before winter.

Pinks should be planted out as early in the month as possible, where they are to blossom next season; they thrive best in fresh, light, rich soil.

Carnations.—Pot off or plant out rooted layers. Use loam from the surface of a grass field, and which has lain for some months in the compost heap; beware of the wire-worm, which may be trapped by laying bits of carrots near the surface amongst the plants.

Annals, such as the following, sown in the early part of the month in dry ground, will stand the winter, and bloom early in the following summer, viz. :—Clarkia, rose and white; Collinsia, grandiflora and bicolor; Sweet-pea, Nemophylla insignis, Malopa grandiflora, Gillia tricolor, Leptosiphon, androsace, &c. Prepare frames, paint and clean the greenhouse for the reception of plants.

An economical pit for wintering half-hardy plants may be formed of sods, or still better, of well-worked clay, with which some straw has been mixed; the walls may be about two feet high in front, by three one-half feet at back, and eighteen inches thick. Rafters and sashes will then only be required, and the whole cost of a pit twelve feet long by six feet wide will scarcely amount to £2.

Plant box-edging; clip box; save seeds of annals, dahlias, pansies, and other plants as they ripen; remove plants as they go out of blossom; hoe the ground to destroy weeds, and endeavour to make up in tidiness for the decaying beauty and interest of the flower garden.

Rosebuds.—Take up and divide, planting the slips in rich fresh earth; do the same with mule, sweetwilliam, phloxes, penstemons, lobelias, campanulas, and other herbaceous plants.

Plants for bedding next summer.—Cuttings of fuchsias, geraniums, calceolarias, verbenas, cinerarias, &c., put in in July or August, will now be rooted, and should be potted in sandy soil, eight or ten plants of some of the kinds may be placed in a six-inch pot; let this be done early in the month that the plants may be well established before winter.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Nursery.—Make layers of laurels, Portugal laurel, laurustinus, bays, rhododendrons, &c. To do so, nothing more is necessary than to bend a branch to the ground and fasten it down, twist the side branches, or remove a little of the bark from their under side, and throw some earth on them. Platanus, lime, and all such trees as are not raised from seeds may also be layered.

Cuttings.—The latter end of this month is the best time for making cuttings of evergreens, such as those named above. Any open piece of loamy or moory ground will answer, and cuttings made in almost any way will grow. The usual method is, to make the cuttings from the present year's growth, cutting it off with a smooth horizontal cut, just where it is joined to the wood of last year. The length of the cutting may be from twelve to sixteen inches or more, the leaves from about one-half its length cut away, and the sets inserted in a nick formed with the spade in previously-dug ground. They may be put in so close as an inch apart, and the lines eight or nine inches one from another across the bed.

Wooding.—The seedling beds and all other parts of the nursery must continue to receive attention to this work. Young plants, once overrun with weeds, will not only be difficult to clean, but are thereby constitutionally injured.

Thinning of young plantations may now be commenced. The plants which are left, and which may have been close, will thus have the autumn to acquire hardiness to enable them to withstand severe weather without injury. In thinning, if the situation be much exposed, an unthinned margin should be left on the exposed side, a couple of perches in depth, and within that, for some distance, only a partial thinning should take place. Many rules have been laid down for performing the work of thinning, but they are of little value; much must be left to the discretion of the thinner, who, if he have had some experience, and especially if he have turned his attention to the nature and growth of trees, (and if he have not, it would be most injudicious to confide such work to him,) will not be at a loss how to act. A consideration of the circumstances will enable him to determine which kind, supposing the plantation to be made on the present random plan of planting all sorts, ought ultimately to stand to become timber; and he will thin away the rest, with a view to the good of these. He will allow as many as possible of those which are ultimately to be thinned out, to attain a useful size, but not at the risk of injury to the principal trees, which must by no means be encroached upon.

OCTOBER.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

Vineries.—Maintain a dry atmosphere, by fires by day, in late graperies, and prune vines intended for early forcing.

Peach-house.—As soon as the leaves have fallen let the trees be unfurnished, washed, and again tied in; paint the wood work in the interior of the house.

Peas and Beans.—A few early frame or Charlton peas and Mazagan beans, may be sown in dry ground under shelter of a south wall or fence; the chances are against them surviving the winter; but if they should, they will be early. Some chopped furze, placed immediately over the seed in the drills, will assist in protecting them from the attack of mice. Peas sown in flower-pots and protected in a frame, may be turned out of the pots, without breaking the ball, into the open ground in April, by which means a few early dishes may be obtained; or they may be sown in a notch formed on the earth side of stripes of sod buried a couple of inches in a frame: these bits of sod may be raised and planted out in April without checking the peas, which will thus be very early.

Potatoes.—Those who possess dry sheltered ground may plant ash-leaved kidney potatoes towards the end of the month; those planted in pits with a slight degree of heat, will be fit for use in the beginning of May.

Cabbages, for early spring use, should be planted out in a piece of rich dry ground; they may be planted rather close, say nine inches apart, every second plant being drawn out in April for greens; the remainder will be close enough for heading.

Asparagus Beds should receive their winter dressing as soon as the haulm withers; the bed being cleared, a layer of sea-sand and salt, to the depth of one-eighth of an inch of the latter, may be scattered over the surface; over which, old hot-bed dung to the depth of a couple of inches may be spread, to be forked into the surface in March.

Parsnips may be sown at any time this month or next in dry, deep, well-manured land, in rows fifteen inches apart.

Transplant lettuce, cabbage, and cauliflower plants from the seed-beds into a dry warm border.

Sea-bale should be divested of its withered leaves, after which compost may be laid over the plants, the sea-kale pots put on, and a portion covered over with some fermenting stable litter: it will be ready for use about Christmas.

Rhubarb may be treated in the same way. To force this delicious vegetable, and asparagus, the pits and frames being cleared of melon and cucumber plants, may have the earth and surface-dung of the bed worked up together and made fine; plants three years old or upwards, planted and covered over to the depth of a few inches with light compost, and the remainder of the space between the earth and the glass (in the rhubarb bed) then filled with tree-leaves or turf-mould.

Potatoes.—The ash-leaved kidney being now planted in the melon pits, in a mixture of fresh earth with a little rotten dung, will be ready for use in April.

Artichokes.—Thin the old stools, and of the side-shoots make a new plantation if required: dig in plenty of well-rotted manure between the stools.

Raspberry Bushes should be pruned by cutting away the shoots, which bore fruit the past season; the sooner this is done after the fruit is gathered, the stronger will the bushes become.

Gooseberry and Currant Bushes should be pruned, and a good dressing of well-rotted manure forked into the surface; this is the best season for propagating them by cuttings.

Cauliflowers.—Plant good strong plants in clumps of four, to be covered with hand-glasses, or if the land be dry and sheltered, plant in lines two feet apart and eighteen inches plant from plant in the row.

Renew old gardens by carting out a portion of the surface and replacing it with a like quantity from a pasture field, or one recently broken up; or if this cannot be obtained, and that the land is dry, trench so deeply as to put down the old surface and bring up new.

Fruit Trees.—The end of the month is the best season in the whole year for planting every kind of tree and shrub, whether deciduous or evergreen. Be sure that land about to be planted does not require to be drained; and if of a cold or clayey nature, we would not only plant shallow, but would extend the roots on the surface, and place the necessary depth of fresh loam over them.

FLOWER GARDEN.

Greenhouse and Pits.—These structures should be put in a state to receive the plants by being painted, repaired if necessary, and made quite clean; the plants should be brought in by times, so that by allowing them abundance of sun and air, and withholding water, the free or luxuriant growing kinds may retain the least possible amount of water in their system consistent with health; such will bear an amount of frost that would destroy unprepared plants.

Tulip.—The latter end of this or the beginning of the ensuing month is the proper season for planting this gaudy flower, once the favourite, to a degree of mania, of florists, but which, in consequence perhaps of the numerous modern beauties which dispute its sovereignty, is now comparatively neglected. The tulip requires a fresh loam enriched by abundance of well-rotted manure: the bulbs are usually planted in five or seven lines in a bed; and the bulbs in the lines at seven inches apart. Flowering bulbs may be covered to the depth of four inches. The plants require the protection of hoops and mats from severe frost. The flowers must be shaded from the sun, and the plants raised when the leaves are withered, and put by in a dry place.

Carnations and Picotees.—Plant the rooted layers three in a pot of eight inches diameter; or plant them in beds where they are to flower: the former is the better plan, as in that case they can be placed in a situation where they may be protected from wet, much of which is very injurious to them.

Auriculas should be placed in frames. The plants may stand on a floor of bricks, or of sand or ashes laid on the surface; they must have plenty of air, but be protected from wet, and only receive water when they appear to want it. If the frames are placed standing on four bricks, one at each corner, air will be admitted, and wet may be excluded.

Polyanthuses may receive the same treatment, but they do better if planted in a border; a coat of sand should be laid on the surface of the ground between the plants. Pinka, pansies, and all kinds of florists' flowers should be protected in the same way.

Perennial plants may now be increased by dividing the stools; the slips or divisions should be planted in the reserve ground, whence they may be removed with balls into the flower-beds in spring.

Cuttings of Chinese and other evergreen roses, and of evergreens of almost all kinds, may now be made. Moss and other deciduous roses should be pruned and mulched, by spreading some well-rotted manure on the surface of the ground over their roots.

Spring Flowers.—Stocks, wallflowers, hyacinths, narcissus, Persian iris, tulips, crocus, planted now in the open borders flower in spring. Calceolarias, Chinese primroses, verbenas, &c., which have stood in the open ground, should be raised and potted, if not already done, and removed to a frame; the sashes kept close for a few days: after which, admit air gradually at first, and after two or three weeks let them get abundance of it every fine day. The vacancies thus made in the flower-beds should be filled by hardy heaths, calimias, mahonias, and even aucubas, laurustinus, bays, &c., kept in pots for the purpose.

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Nursery.—Collect haws, mix them with fine earth or sand, in a layer twelve or fifteen inches in depth; after the pulp has been rotted, the heap may be formed in the shape of a potato pit, and covered with earth, so to remain, at least twelve months. Yew and holly berries are now to be collected, and treated in like manner.

Cuttings and layering of Evergreens, if not finished, should be attended to immediately. Cuttings of plantanus, poplars, and willows, should be planted in light mellow soil.

Forking between the lined-out trees in the nursery admits the air, and is very serviceable to young trees.

Line-out Seedlings in land perfectly free from weeds, and which has been prepared by being well manured for a crop of turnips, cabbage, potatoes, &c. Dig the ground and break it well; lay it out in beds ten feet wide, with alleys eighteen inches wide, in which plant the seedlings, in lines twelve or fifteen inches apart, and two or three inches between the plants.

NOVEMBER.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

Vines and Peach-trees intended for forcing in the beginning of the ensuing year, their wood being now ripened, should be exposed to the external air, the borders being covered with a thick coat of rotten manure.

Fruit Trees.—Finish the planting, root, and top pruning, if possible, this month; avoid deep planting, as the great bane of fertility, and see that the land be not retentive of too much water. Spread some rotten manure on the surface over the roots of wall-trees.

Gooseberry Bushes, when the object is to produce few and large berries, are severely pruned—all the weak shoots are cut out—the others shortened to about half their length, and the bush is kept very thin of wood. In ordinary pruning the weak wood is cut back to two or three eyes, leaving that which is to bear fruit at full length.

White and Red Currants are pruned much in the way of the prize gooseberries—the weak wood cut away, and the rest shortened to half its length. The wood of black currants is merely thinned, but not shortened.

Strawberries.—All runners have of course been long since removed; the surface of the ground should now be slightly forked, and a couple of inches in thickness, at least, of well-rotted hot-bed or farm-yard manure spread between the plants, so as to cover the whole surface of the ground.

Potatoes.—Ash-leaved kidneys may now be planted on dry ground, and covered with, at least, six inches of earth; some short-topped radish may be sown on the surface of the beds, and the covering of fern, &c., required for them, will at the same time protect the potatoes.

Apple-trees which are becoming covered with moss or lichens, and the young terminal wood of which dies annually, indicate that their roots have descended into a cold, wet, or unwholesome subsoil. In order to restore them to health, the oversight committed by the planter must be remedied. The ground must be rendered dry by being deeply drained; and if the trees be not too old they should be raised and replanted, cutting off some of the long bare roots and thinning the tops; if too old to be replanted, treat them as follows: remove the earth from about the roots, and such of them as have a downward tendency cut, leaving only those which take a horizontal course. The excavation under the roots may be filled with stones, brick-bats, &c., through which the roots will not again be so likely to penetrate. The remainder of the excavation should be filled with fresh earth, from a newly broken-up field, in which the sod is blended. The branches of the tree may at the same time be thinned, the moss scraped off, and both trunk and branches covered with a thick whitewash of lime and water. Loosen the surface of the ground as far as the roots are supposed to extend, and spread some well-rotted manure on it, to be forked in in spring; and the chances are, that the trees will in a few years become fruitful, and continue so.

Preserve roots of carrots, parsnips, and beet in dry turf-mould or sand, in ashed or thatched pit. Cauliflowers which are ready for use may be raised, and placed close together, roots downwards, in a shed or under a wall or hedge.

Protect the roots of peas, beans, and cauliflowers from injury by frost, by a layer of turf-mould, sand, or sawdust.

Trench and ridge up Ground.—A garden which possesses a naturally dry subsoil, or which has been rendered dry by effectual draining, may be kept in permanent fruitfulness at a small expense of manure, over and above the produce of the compost heap, formed of leaves, and the refuse vegetable matter of the garden. With this view, an occasional trenching, say once in three or four years, and annually riddling the ground up roughly at this season, are matters not to be neglected. More or less of the soluble part of the manure from time to time applied, is carried down into the subsoil which trenching brings to the surface. A good dose of lime and salt now digged into the ground will destroy slugs and other slimy-coated destroyers of crops, as well as act beneficially on the soil and manure.

FLOWER GARDEN.

Greenhouse and Pits.—Continue to give abundance of air whenever the weather is open; water only such plants as seem to require it; pick off all withering leaves, and do not apply fire heat except in very severe frost, and then merely sufficient to raise the temperature above the freezing point.

Finish the planting of bulbous roots as directed last month.

Dahlias, gladiolus, tropeolums, tigridias, commelinas, and such tuberous-rooted plants, should be raised on a dry day in the beginning of the month, their names or numbers firmly fastened to them, and dried in a shed for a few days, and then laid past in a room, cellar, or other place, out of the reach of either frost or heat. Dry turf-mould or earth may be thrown amongst the roots.

Perennial Plants may now be increased by parting the roots and replanted; the beds being first digged and renovated by the addition of a compost, consisting, if the land be a loam, of manure, maiden-earth, sand, and bog-mould.

Pinks, Pansies, Mimulus, and other herbaceous flowering plants, should have their roots protected from frost by a layer of a couple of inches in depth of sand or turf-mould.

Azalias, roses, Persian lilac, pinks, hyacinths, tulips, Narcissus, violets, &c., to flower in January and February, should now be brought into the stove.

Ranunculuses.—The beds for the reception of these beautiful flowers should now be in a state of preparation; plenty of rich manure should be digged in, and some left on the surface, to be forked in preparatory to planting.

Prune and manure standard and other roses.

Protect half hardy plants, such as fuchsias, white and yellow Chinese roses, &c., by placing sand or turf-mould over the roots, and ferns or spruce fir branches over the branches, which may be pegged down to the surface of the ground.

DECEMBER.

FRUIT AND KITCHEN GARDEN.

Such of the works recommended to be done in the two preceding months as have not yet been finished—as the planting of fruit trees, trenching, manuring, pruning, &c.—should be completed. The mulching, i.e. spreading rotten manure, such as that from an old hot-bed, to the depth of a couple of inches on the surface of the ground, over the roots of fruit-trees and bushes, whether wall or standard, to be forked into the surface in spring, may be proceeded with even in frost.

Cucumbers.—Where early forcing is practised, stable-litter should now be collected and thrown in a heap, and occasionally turned to cause it to ferment equally.

Asparagus and Rhubarb.—Plant successional crops of these in frames for forcing, and bring strawberry pots into the hot-house for the same purpose.

FLOWER GARDEN.

The formation of new, and the alteration of old gardens and pleasure-grounds, also of rock-works, bowers, rustic flower-baskets, &c., will afford occupation after the operations suggested for October and November have been completed. Plants in the greenhouse and cold frames must have all decaying leaves removed; only such plants must receive water as appear to be in want of it; in severe frost fire heat barely sufficient to raise the temperature of the greenhouse a few degrees above the freezing point will be required; frost may be excluded from the cold frame by mats.

Tulip and Hyacinth beds should be protected in severe weather, by a covering of fern or a layer of turf-mould, and that material or sand should be spread to the depth of two or three inches over the surface of pink, carnation, and pansy beds, &c.

Auriculas, Carnations, and Polyanthus in frames, must be kept dry, but have abundance of air in open weather, and all dead leaves should be removed as they appear.

Forcing Pit.—Rhododendrons, azalias, Persian lilacs, lily of the valley, moss and Provence roses, kalmias, daphnes, hyacinths, Narcissus, tulips, &c., being placed in a warm pit and well attended to, will, by their fragrance and beauty, lend charms even to this dreary season.

Composts.—Advantage should be taken of the leisure which this season affords to prepare compost for future operations. The following directions on this subject, extracted from the Gardeners' Chronicle, page 800, for 1847, are well deserving of attention:—"A most successful florist of our acquaintance procures turf from a pasture field of a loamy tendency. After placing a layer of this six or eight feet square, grass downwards, he covers it with a layer six inches thick of cow manure and rotten leaves; again a layer of turf, which is covered with burnt turf ashes, covering up again with turf. This lies till February, when the whole is chopped over, and two pecks of salt sprinkled on it as it is turned. In frosty weather it is again turned once or twice, and in May it is again chopped over, and two pecks of lime added. This may appear much trouble; but he has no insects in his beds, and they are perfectly sweetened, and his flowers are always first rate."

PLANTER'S CALENDAR.

Nursery.—Seeds of birch, alder, horn-beam, and laburnum should be gathered, and, being perfectly dry, put into bags or drawers out of the way of mice, and kept in a dry place until April, when they may be sown.

Portugal Laurel, laurustinus, and privet berries should be gathered as they ripen, and sown at once in shallow drills of light earth.

Acorns should be sown as they are gathered, in broad drills twelve inches apart, in ground previously well-dug and broken fine, and which has borne a cleaning crop, such as turnips, potatoes, &c., for which it had been well manured; or the acorns may be spread on the surface of the beds at about one inch apart, and covered from the alleys with two inches of earth broken fine. Horse-chestnuts, walnuts, and Spanish chestnuts should be treated in the same way, only sown rather thinner and covered deeper.

Ash-keys, mountain-ash, and bird-service, must be mixed with some fine earth or sand, and laid in a heap to rot. The heap should be flat, and only ten or twelve inches deep, to prevent heating; if this be prevented, it matters not what is the size or shape of the heap.

Layers and cuttings, as directed last month, may still be made. Thinning should be proceeded with, and preparations for planting next month be made. These will consist in—

Draining.—This is a most essential work, as, where the land is wet, if it be neglected it is utterly useless to hope for success. Open drains are preferable in plantations to any other kind, all covered drains being liable to be closed by the roots of the trees. These open drains must be at distances regulated by the wetness of the ground. It must be very wet indeed, when drains three feet deep and thirty feet apart will not dry it. In many cases, one deep drain along the base of rising ground will dry a large tract below.

Fencing.—Where stones are abundant they form the best fence, either with mortar or dry. Next to these in point of efficacy are the common ditch and bank.

Prepare Land for Planting.—All low land should be prepared for planting by trenching, or, where labour is too expensive, and stones, roots, or other impediments do not stand in the way, a kind of substitute for trenching will be found by using the subsoil plough, following in the track of the common plough.

Upon every fractional part of £1 of the annual value or amount of the property, profits, or gains, payable under any of the Schedules to this Act, the like proportion of duty at the respective rates shall be charged; provided that no duty shall be charged of a lower denomination than one penny.

Any person charged or chargeable to any of the duties, either by assessment or by deduction, from any rent or other annual payment, or who shall have paid the same by deduction or otherwise, and shall prove before the Commissioners for General Purposes that his total income from every source is less than £100, shall be exempted from the duties, and be entitled to be repaid the amount of all deductions or payments on account thereof; except so much of such duties as he is entitled to charge against any other person, or retain from or out of any payment to which he may be liable. —§ 28, and 5 & 6 Vict., c. 35, § 163.

* The areas of the Counties of Scotland have been obtained by Major Dawson, R.E., of the Tide Commission, by admeasurement from Arrow- smith's General Map of Scotland (published in 1846), except for the Orkney and Shetland Islands, computed from Charts in the Hydrographic Office, and for Wigtownshire, Kirkcudbright, and Edinburghshire, the acreage of which, as determined by the Ordnance Survey Department, is stated. All inland waters and fresh water lakes are included, amounting to 169,967 acres; but the salt water firths, bays, and channels, are excluded, mainly on account of the difficulty of determining, with respect to so irregular a coast line as that of Scotland, what extent of sea can be deemed to be within the limits of the Kingdom. Major Dawson has, however, computed the quantity of salt water within a line drawn by him round the coast at 1,115,680 acres, including 250,147 acres around the Orkney and Shetland Islands.

† This quantity includes 250,147 acres of salt water, the channels between the Islands of the Orkney and Shetland groups having been included only included; a departure from the principle adopted in stating the areas of the other Counties, which was not noticed until too late for correction.

‡ From a Return, furnished by the Board of Inland Revenue, of the annual value of Real Property assessed to the Property and Income Tax for the years ending 5th April, 1849, being the latest period to which it can be given.

* Although a new bishopric (the see of Manchester) has been created by the Act 10 & 11 Vic., cap. 106, the second section thereof declares, "that the number of lords spiritual now sitting and voting as lords of Parliament shall not be increased by the creation of the bishopric of Manchester; and whenever there shall be a vacancy among the lords spiritual by the avoidance of any one of the sees of Canterbury, York, London, Durham, or any other see which shall be filled by the translation thereto from any other see of a bishop at that time actually sitting as a lord of Parliament, such vacancy shall be supplied by the issue of a writ of summons to the bishop who shall be elected to the same see; but if such vacancy be caused by avoidance of any other see in England or Wales, such vacancy shall be supplied by the issue of a writ of summons to that bishop of a see in England or Wales, who shall not have previously been entitled to such writ." The Bishop of Ripon has therefore no seat by virtue of his Bishopric until a vacancy occurs on the Bench of Bishops. The Bishop of Bath and Wells sits as Baron Auckland.

Rotation of Irish Representative Bishops in Parliament.—By Act 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 87, the Archbishops of Armagh and Dublin sit in the House of Lords alternately from session to session; and the rotation of the Bishops' Sees for sitting in Parliament is as follows:—Meath, Cashel, [Tuam], Derry, Limerick, Down, Omory, Cork, Killaue, Kilmora. But the Act of Union provides, that when one of the bishops is a temporal peer his see shall be passed over in the rotation, consequently the see of Tuam (occupied by Lord Plunket) is now omitted in the rotation.

PEERAGE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE,

ALPHABETICALLY ARRANGED.

The House of Lords is composed of Temporal and Spiritual Peers.

The Temporal Peers consist of—1. Peers of England created previous to the Union between England and Scotland in 1707. 2. Peers of Great Britain created after the Union with Scotland, and previous to the Union between Great Britain and Ireland in 1800. 3. Peers of the United Kingdom created since the Union of the three countries in 1800. 4. Scotch Representative Peers. The Temporal Peers of Scotland are entitled to elect from among their body 16 members as their representatives in the House of Lords during each distinct Parliament. 5. Irish Representative Peers. The Temporal Peers of Ireland, immediately after the Union with Great Britain, elected 28 representatives for life, and supply vacancies as they occur by the exertion of the same elective power.

The Spiritual Peers are—1. The Archbishops and Bishops of England and Wales, with the exception of those created by the Act 10 & 11 Vic., cap. 108.* 2. Irish Representative Bishops. The Spiritual Peers of Ireland are represented in Parliament not by election but by rotation, the Archbishops of Armagh and Dublin sitting in the House of Lords alternately, along with three Bishops in annual rotation as follows:—Meath, Cashel, Tuam, Derry, Limerick, Down, Ossory, Cork, Killaloe, Kilmore.

In addition to the above Peers, having seats in the House of Lords, the following alphabetical list contains the names and titles of all Peers of Scotland and Ireland having no seat in the House of Lords, but having the right of sitting in the house as Representative Peers for Scotland or Ireland, if elected; and the Bishops of England, Wales, and Ireland, all of whom sit by rotation. No Peers of Scotland have been created since the Union of that country with England in 1707, but by the Act for the Union of Ireland with Great Britain, on the extinction of three Irish Peerages existing at the time of the Union, the Crown has the power to create one new Irish Peerage, to rank with those of the United Kingdom according to the date of creation.

BARONETAGE OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

THE SCOTCH BARONETS ARE DISTINGUISHED BY THE LETTER [S]; THE IRISH BY THE LETTER [I].

The Order of Baronets—an hereditary dignity next in rank to the Peers—was instituted by James I. in the year 1611, at the suggestion of Sir Robert Cotton, the celebrated antiquary, who was himself included among the earlier creations. The immediate object was to raise money for carrying out the plantation of Ulster, and, in the first instance, the number was limited to 200 gentlemen of good birth, and possessed of a clear estate of one thousand pounds per annum; the condition being the payment into the Exchequer, in three instalments, of so much money as would maintain thirty soldiers for three years, at 8*d.* per day, in the province of Ulster in Ireland. Since the reign of James I. the Order has been enlarged in number at the pleasure of the Crown. The creation is by patent under the Great Seal, and generally limited to the heirs-male of the grantee, but sometimes otherwise entailed. Sir Nicholas Bacon was the first Baronet.

The Order of Baronets of Ireland was instituted by King James I. in 1619. The first Baronet of Ireland was Sir Francis Blundell; the latest creation was on October 1, 1799 (the late Sir Jonah D. W. Cuffe).

The Order of Baronets of Scotland, or Nova Scotia Baronets, was instituted in 1625 by Charles I., with the object of encouraging the plantation and settlement of Nova Scotia—a certain portion of land in that province being granted to each. The first Baronet of Scotland was Sir Robert Gordon; and the last creation was in 1708, the year preceding the Union with England.

Baronets rank, amongst themselves, in accordance with the dates of their patents of creation, and take precedence of all Knights except those of the Garter.
